PREFACE.

THAT part of GEOGRAPHY which is peculiarly adapted to the compoſition of a work like the preſent, is, perhaps, one of the moſt generally pleaſing in the whole circle of human ſcience: few perſons, who read or hear of events, or hiſtorical occurrences, will be ſatisfied without knowing the ſituation, and other circumſtances relating to the countries or towns, in which the ſeveral tranſactions took place; the reader becomes intereſted in the event, and almoſt a party in the ſcene: all things appear in his mind's eye; and as it were a ſpectator, in full ſecurity he beholds actions of glory and ravages of war. It is intended to deſcribe the world as it is; and in this reſpect the preſent Work affords a much greater degree of information than any other, at leaſt in the Engliſh language. In every article, truth, accuracy, and impartiality, have been conſidered as fundamental principles, and invariably purſued; with an endeavour to give of every country, city, or town, an adequate or proportionate account, with only ſo much of their ſeveral hiſtories as might immediately concern their political revolutions. A Gazetteer that is merely an abridgment, will, at one time or other, be of little uſe: for, who can predict what ſhall be the moſt important ſpots of the earth, to which public attention may be directed? Experience, ariſing from the preſent war, convinces us, that places of apparent inſignificance have grown into celebrity; while their name, ſituation, and connexion with other places, were before almoſt unknown, or greatly ſubject to miſrepreſentation. New diſcoveries in the Pacific and Atlantic Seas have added largely to the nomenclature of a Geographical Dictionary, opened new ſources of commerce, and given great room for reflexion to the philoſopher, the moraliſt, and the divine. The events of Europe and America have for the laſt twenty years been indeed important, producing changes in the political ſtate almoſt unheard of before; and the Editor has not failed, in the courſe of this Work, to avail himſelf of theſe changes. The reflexions made are few; every thing of party has been avoided, and every religious opinion treated with reſpect. Our plan is to include every part of the known world, that is capable of deſignation or deſcription; pointing out its ſituation, particular character, its form of government, or a reference to the government to which it is ſubject; its commerce, and productions; and the manners, dreſs, and peculiarities of the people, where thoſe are diſtinguiſhable as a claſs. In laying down ſituations, the diſtances have been carefully meaſured, and the moſt approved maps and charts have been conſulted for the important articles, latitude and longitude. In the accompliſhment of theſe objects, which have engaged the Editor's attention for ſome years, it was his aim to accumulate all that the preſent ſtate of knowledge affords. With this view, therefore, he had recourſe to the moſt approved and indiſputable authorities; to d'Anville, de Lille, Martiniere, Moreri, Robert de Vaugondy, Sanſon, Jaeger, Homann, Maier, Magini, de Wit, Muller, Viſcher, Camden, Buſching, Rennel, Bernouilli, Cook, Dalrymple, Berenger, Dutens, Arrowſmith, the New Atlas of France, publiſhed by the Directory; the Grand Map of Ruſſia, publiſhed in the Ruſſian language, by order of the late empreſs, &c. &c. with all the principal modern Voyages and Travels. To theſe may be added the communications of many gentlemen who ſerved abroad, have been perſonally acquainted with places not generally known, or imperfectly deſcribed, and who have pointed out ſources of information, ſuch as are not often to be met with. For the farther illuſtration of the Work, equal pains have been taken to prepare a ſeries of Maps, executed at a very great expence, and upon a ſcale ſufficiently large to conſtitute a Complete Atlas. In the body of the Work, the longitude is fixed according to the maps from whence the names of the different places were reſpectively taken. Thus Engliſh maps, for the moſt part, fix their meridian at Greenwich, or London; Spain is calculated from the Peak of Teneriffe; while the geographers of France univerſally place their meridian at Ferro. In the maps of our Atlas, the longitude is calculated from Greenwich. In England and Wales the miles marked to denote the diſtances are Engliſh ſtatute miles, 69½ to a degree. Every where elſe, unleſs particularly expreſſed, geographical miles (60 to a degree) are to be underſtood. A league is ſuppoſed to contain three of theſe miles; and one German, of which fifteen make a degree, contains our geographical miles.

NOTE.—TO THE BOOK-BINDER.

Signature [4 H] of this WORK is cancelled—the Kingdom of NORWAY having been omitted in the ENGLISH EDITION.

PRELIMINARY OBSERVATIONS.

THE earth on which we dwell, is but a ſmall part of one ſyſtem, or portion of the univerſe. According to the diſcovery of Copernicus, approved by ſir Iſaac Newton, and now univerſally adopted, the ſun is the centre of the ſyſtem, round which planets and comets move in different periods, and at different diſtances. The diameter of the ſun, is computed to be 890,000 miles, his ſuperficial content 2,488,461,360,000, and its ſolid content 369,121,768,400,000,000 cubic miles. The revolution round its own axis is performed in twenty-five days ſix hours.

Planets are celeſtial bodies, which revolve round the ſun as a centre, continually changing their poſition, with reſpect to other ſtars; and ſuppoſed to be opaque bodies. Till lately, aſtronomers obſerved only ſix, viz. Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, the Earth, Venus, and Mercury. Mr. Herſchel, a few years ſince, diſcovered a ſeventh, which in compliment to his patron, the king of England, he named the Georgium Sidus: foreign aſtronomers, however, call it by the name of the Diſcoverer.

Theſe planets move in different orbits round the ſun; Saturn in about thirty years, Jupiter in about twelve: Mars in two: Venus, the brighteſt of the planets, is never farther diſtant from the ſun than 42 degrees, and performs its courſe in about ſeven months; when it precedes the ſun, it is a morning ſtar: when it follows, it appears only in the evening. Mercury is ſtill nearer to the ſun than Venus, being never diſtant more than 28 degrees. The revolution of the earth forms our year.

That the earth, and the reſt of the planets move round the ſun as a centre, is evident from obſervation and reaſon, nay, to mathematical demonſtration. Mercury is 3000 miles in diameter, and it contains 28,274,400 ſquare miles, the ſolid contents are eſtimated at 14,137,200,000 cubic miles. Its diſtance from the ſun is 36,841,468 miles, and its revolution round the ſun is performed in 87 days twenty-three hours, moving at the rate of 109,699 miles and a fraction in an hour. The diameter of Venus is computed to be 9330 miles, its ſurface to be equal to 273,472,824 ſquare miles, and its ſolid contents to be 425,250,241,693 cubic miles. Its diſtance from the ſun is 68,891,486 miles, and its courſe round the ſun is performed in 224 days, ſeventeen hours, moving at the rate of 80,295 miles and a fraction in an hour, and turning round its own axis in twenty-four days eight hours. The form of the earth is nearly ſpherical, the courſe is elliptical, and the motion equal to 68,243 miles and a fraction in an hour; its diſtance from the ſun is computed to be 95,173,000; the diameter is 7970 miles, its ſurface contains 199,557,259 ſquare miles, and its ſolid contents are equal to 265,078,559,623 cubic miles. Mars is 5400 miles in diameter, its ſuperficies 91,608,956 ſquare miles, and its ſolid contents 82,448,140,400 cubic miles. Its diſtance from the ſun is 145,014,184 miles. It moves round the ſun in one year, 321 days, ſeventeen hours, at the rate of 55,287 miles in an hour; its revolution round its own axis is performed in twenty-four hours forty minutes. Jupiter's diameter is 94,000 miles, its ſuperficial content 27,759,077,600 ſquare miles, and its ſolid content 434,893,782,400,000 cubic miles; its diſtance from the ſun is 494,990,976 miles; its revolution round the ſun is performed in eleven years, 314 days, 18 hours, moving about 29,083½ miles in an hour, and round its own axis in nine hours fifty-ſix minutes Saturn's diameter is 78,000 miles, its ſuperficial content 19,113,494,400 ſquare miles, and its ſolid content 248,475,427,200,000 cubic miles. Its diſtance from the ſun 907,956,130 miles. Its courſe round the ſun is performed in twenty-nine years, 167 days, and ſix hours, moving at the rate of 22,101 miles and a fraction in an hour: its revolution round its own axis is unknown. The Georgium Sidus, or the Herſchel, is reckoned to be twice as large as Saturn, and is ſuppoſed to be rather more than eighty-three years in performing its revolution round the ſun, from which it is farther diſtant than any other planet yet diſcovered. Mercury and Venus are called inferior planets, becauſe they move within the earth's orbit, and are nearer the ſun. Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, and the Georgium Sidus, are called ſuperior planets, becauſe they move without the earth's orbit, and are farther from the ſun.

Beſides the ſeven primary planets, there are ſecondary planets, called ſatellites, which move round the primary planets, in the ſame manner as theſe do round the ſun. The principal of theſe is the moon, the ſatellite of the earth; Jupiter has four, Saturn ſeven, and the Georgium Sidus two. The diameter of the moon is 2180 miles, its diſtance from the earth's centre 240,000 miles; its revolution round the earth is performed in twenty-ſeven days, ſeven hours, and forty-three minutes, moving at the rate of 2299 miles and near an half in an hour.

The fixed ſtars are diſtinguiſhed from the planets, by their continual twinkling. Theſe ſtars never change their ſituation with regard to each other, as the planets do. For though the revolutions of the earth occaſion an apparent motion of the heavens; yet, if any two fixed ſtars be obſerved at ſeveral intervals of time, they will always be found to preſerve the ſame poſition with reſpect to each other, during the whole courſe of the obſervation. Theſe ſtars are all ſuppoſed to be ſuns; each ſhining by its own light, and each ſituated in the centre of a ſyſtem, in which planets revolve round them, as round our ſun. The diſtance of the fixed ſtars from us is ſo great, that even the neareſt of them, which is Sirius, the dog-ſtar, never appears to vary in its dimenſions to our ſight, though the earth, in its annual revolution, is 195 millions of miles nearer to it, when in one part of its orbits than when in that which is oppoſite.

Comets are ſuppoſed to be ſolid opaque bodies of various magnitudes, like the planets from which they are diſtinguiſhed, principally by long tranſparent tails, reſembling a pale flame, and iſſuing from the part of the comet fartheſt from the ſun; they are ſuppoſed to move round the ſun, and croſs the orbits of the planets, in all manner of directions.

Globes are either terreſtrial or celeſtial; a terreſtrial globe is an artificial ſphere, on whoſe ſurface is delineated the principal countries of the earth, cities, iſlands, rivers, &c. in their proper ſituation, with the circles imagined to be on the ſurface of the earth. A celeſtial globe is intended to ſhew the ſituation of the fixed ſtars in their proportionate diſtances, together with the principal circles of the ſphere.

The ecliptic is a line or circle in the ſphere of the ſtars, under which the ſun apparently moves, and deſcribes his yearly courſe. It is called alſo, the ſun's orbit, or the ſun's way in the apparent motion from eaſt to weſt.

Pole, the point or extremity of the earth's axis: the two grand poles are the North or Arctic, and the South or Antarctic; each of theſe are 90 degrees from the equator. The altitude or elevation of the pole, is an arch of the meridian, intercepted between the pole and the horizon; this altitude or elevation is the ſame as the latitude; and the rule to diſcover it is to obſerve the greateſt and the leaſt meridian altitude of the Polar ſtar, with a quadrant: ſubtract the leaſt from the greateſt; the mean is the altitude required.

The longitude of a place, is an arch of the meridian, between one place and another, or the number of degrees eaſt or weſt, from the meridian or imaginary line drawn through a particular place from pole to pole.

The ſituation of the firſt meridian, or that point from which the longitude is taken, is arbitrary, and by different nations and different geographers fixed differently, ſometimes according to accidental circumſtances. It ſeems to have been a cuſtom among the ancient geographers to place it where they ſuppoſed was the moſt weſterly point of the habitable globe, and reckon the longitude only to the eaſt. But the places chiefly fixed on in maps and ſea journals, have been Greenwich by the Engliſh, Ferro by the French and many other nations, and the Peak of Teneriffe by the Dutch and Spaniards. Aſtronomers in general chooſe their place of obſervation for their firſt meridian.

In this GAZETTEER, the longitude is taken ſometimes from Greenwich, at others from Ferro and the Peak of Teneriffe, as found in the authors or maps ſtudied for the work, chooſing rather this method than run the riſk of the great number of miſtakes which might have been incurred in reducing every one to a common meridian.

The degrees of longitude are always gradually leſſening from the equator, as they approach to either of the poles.

Latitude—By latitude is underſtood the diſtance of any place from the equator, whether north or ſouth.

Zodiac—A faſcia, or band, of which the ecliptic forms the centre, and the extremes two parallel circles, which comprehend or bound the courſe of the ſun and planets. The ſun never deviates from the ecliptic: the planets do more or leſs: their greateſt deviations, called latitudes, are the meaſure of the breadth of the zodiac, according to ſome ſixteen, others eighteen, and others twenty degrees broad. The zodiac croſſing the equator obliquely, makes an angle of twenty-three degrees twenty-nine minutes, which is the ſun's greateſt declination. It is divided into twelve portions or ſigns, each containing thirty degrees.

Zones—Diviſions of the ſphere, with reſpect to the different degrees of heat found in different parts, contained between two parallel lines: they are termed torrid, temperate, and frigid. The torrid zone extends on each ſide of the equator to the tropics, that is, as far as twenty-three degrees twenty-nine minutes of north and ſouth latitude. The temperate zone or zones, for there are two, north and ſouth, extend from Lat. 23. 29. to 66. 31. The frigid zones occupy the remaining part of the globe towards the north and ſouth poles.

Nadir—That point of the heavens or the ſphere which is immediately under our feet, drawing a ſtraight line through the centre of the earth. The zenith and nadir are the two poles of the horizon, being each ninety degrees from it.

Zenith—The vertical point of the heavens immediately over our head, diametrically oppoſite the nadir.

Horizon—A circle of the ſphere, which divides the world into two parts or hemiſpheres, the one upper, viſible; the other beneath, and hidden: horizon is called rational or ſenſible; the true or rational horizon is a circle whoſe plane paſſes through the centre of the earth, and whoſe poles are the zenith and nadir, and divides the earth into two hemiſpheres. The ſenſible or viſible horizon is a leſs circle of the ſphere, which divides the viſible part of the earth and heaven from that which is inviſible.

Climate—Among geographers, is ſuppoſed to contain ſuch a part of the ſurface of the globe as is bounded between two circles, parallel to the equinoctial line, that the longeſt day in that part nearer the polar circle ſhall exceed the longeſt day in that part nearer the equator by ſome certain ſpace, viz. half an hour: the beginning of the climate is reckoned when the day is ſhorteſt. Climate is uſed likewiſe to ſignify the temperature of the air. Later geographers have given a table of twenty.

| Middle of | Longeſt day | | Latitude | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| I. Climate | 12 hours, | 30 minutes | 7. 18. | N. or S. |
| II. | 13 | - | 15. 36. | |
| III. | 13 | 30 | 23. 8. | |

| XX. | 90. | 188 | 180 | 90. | 178 | 177 |

Equator—A great circle of the earth, which ſurrounds it in the centre, at an equal diſtance from the north and ſouth pole. It is ſo called, becauſe when the ſun is on it, the days and nights are equal, whence it is called the equinoctial line, and ſometimes ſimply the line. The line is ſuppoſed to divide the ſphere into two hemiſpheres, the north and the ſouth, from their reſpective ſituations, and is ninety degrees, called degrees of latitude, from each pole.

Tropics—Two circles of the ſphere ſo called, ſituated to the north and ſouth of the equator, each at the diſtance of twenty-three degrees twenty-nine minutes, being the ſun's greateſt declination. That to the north is called the tropic of Cancer, and that to the ſouth the tropic of Capricorn.

Ocean—The immenſe body of ſalt water which encompaſſes or bounds the whole globe of the earth. Sometimes it is applied to particular ſeas, as the Pacific Ocean, the Atlantic Ocean, and the Frozen Sea. Perhaps it is not ſynonimous with ſea, as it would appear aukward and uncouth to ſay, Mediterranean Ocean, Caſpian Ocean, &c.

Sea—In oppoſition to land, is applied indiſcriminately with ocean, to ſignify the whole immenſe body of ſalt water which ſurrounds the globe; but is more particularly, and perhaps more properly, applied to a diſtinct part, as the Mediterranean Sea, the Baltic, the North Sea, &c.

Strait, or Straight, or Streight—A narrow channel or arm, which affords a paſſage from one ſea to another, or one gulf to another, as the Straits of Gibraltar, between the Atlantic and Mediterranean; the Straits of Magellan, between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

Channel—A narrow ſea, which either ſeparates an iſland from the continent, two iſlands or two continents from each other, or forms a ſeparation between country and country, as the Engliſh Channel, between England and France; the Briſtol Channel, between England and Wales, &c.

Road—A part of the ſea in which ſhips may anchor, at ſome diſtance from the ſhore, with different degrees of ſecurity, according to the different ſituations, and protection from the winds, which the neighbouring land may afford, as likewiſe from the ground on which the anchor is caſt.

Gulf—A part of the ſea, bounded by projections of land: perhaps where the extremities of the projecting points approach nearer to each other than in a bay: or when ſhut in by iſlands, &c. as in the Gulf of Perſia, the Gulf of Mexico, and many others; though the rule does not always hold good, the diſtinction between gulf and bay does not otherwiſe ſeem to be accurately aſcertained.

Creek—A ſmall bay or inlet of the ſea in general, but perhaps more properly applied in ſuch as admit a capability of landing.

Bay—A part of the ſea or river, formed by a projection of two extremities of the land, and this without reſpect to form or ſize, ſome being very large, as the Bay of Biſcay, the Bay of Honduras, &c.

Lake—A collection of water, ſurrounded by land on all ſides, and having no communication with the ſea, except by rivers: of thoſe, ſome are of vaſt extent, particularly in North America, ſuch as Lake Superior, the largeſt body of freſh water known. Some lakes are found filled with ſalt water, at a conſiderable diſtance from the ſea: ſome lakes are not known to have any rivers either to diſcharge their waters or to ſupply more. Other lakes there are, which conſtantly diſcharge their water without any viſible ſupply, and others again receive, without any rivers being diſcovered through which their waters may be diſcharged.

Iſland—A tract of land ſurrounded by water, in the ſea, a lake, or river, as Great Britain, Ireland, Borneo, Madagaſcar, &c. New Holland is the largeſt iſland known.

Iſthmus—A narrow tract of land which connects two continents: the moſt celebrated of which are that of Suez, which unites Africa to the continent of Aſia, and that of Darien, between North and South America.

Peninſula—A tract of land joined to a continent, or larger extent of country, by a narrow ſtrait. Thus Africa, joined to the reſt of the vaſt continent by the Iſthmus of Suez, is a peninſula, ſo likewiſe is South America: and the Morea, or ancient Peloponneſus, united to the reſt of Europe by the Iſthmus of Corinth, is a peninſula. This term has been applied to the country of Hindooſtan, without the characteriſtic mark of Iſthmus, as the union with the continent is nearly equal in extent to any other ſide of the triangle.

Cape—A projection extending farther into the ſea than the reſt of the land, with which it is immediately connected. Capes are in general places of note to navigators.

Promontory—An elevated point of land, projecting into the ſea, ſynonimous with headland.

Mole—A large embankment in the ſea, extended to break off the force of the waves, and give ſecurity to veſſels at anchor in a harbour or road; ſometimes it has been applied to the harbour itſelf.

ABYSSINIA, a large country and kingdom of Africa, about three hundred leagues long, and 280 broad; bounded on the eaſt by the Red Sea, on the North by Nubia, on the weſt by Nigritia, and on the South by Cafraria. It is divided into twelve provinces, Maſuah, Tigré, Samen, Begemder, Amhara, Walaka, Gojam, Damot, Maitſha, Dembea, Kuara, and Nara; the principal towns or cities are Gondar, the metropolis of Abyſſinia, Dixan, Axum, and Maſuah. Among the rivers, the principal is the Nile. The country is exceeding mountainous, but fertile wherever land can be cultivated. The air in the vallies is extremely warm, but more temperate on the mountains. The rainy ſeaſon continues ſix months, from April to September, after which is an uninterrupted ſeries of fine weather; no country produces a greater variety of quadrupeds, wild or tame; of the tame, the principal are of the cow kind and ſheep; the wild ſort are the gazel or antelope, jackal, wild hog, elephant, rhinoceros, giraffa or camelopard, lion, leopard, hyena, bohur, faſſa, fecho, madequa, and many others; the crocodile, and hippopotamos, are found in all their large rivers. Among the birds, are reckoned ſeveral ſpecies of the eagle and hawk, the golden gooſe, or gooſe of the Nile, and a vaſt number of others, which frequent both the vallies and mountains. Of the inſects, the moſt remarkable is a fly, called zimb or tſaltſalya, a little larger than a bee, which proves dreadfully tormenting, and even deſtructive to every quadruped, both wild and tame, and from which they can eſcape only by flying from the rich lands to the deſerts, during the whole of the rainy ſeaſon. Among the vegetable productions, may be reckoned the papyrus, the plant from which paper was firſt made by the Egyptians, after the diſuſe of hieroglyphics; the baleſſan, or balm, called alſo balm of Gilead, the ſaſſa, the myrrh tree, the enſete, ſeveral ſpecies of the mimoſa, the kol-quall, the rack, the coffee-tree, the wooginos, cuſſo, teff, of which bread is generally made, and wheat. To prevent rebellion, the children of the kings, at a certain age, are confined to a mountain as a priſon, the mountain of Wechne having of late years been ſet apart for that purpoſe: the crown of Abyſſinia is hereditary as to family, but elective as to perſon, and it has ſometimes happened, that an infant has been elected, under the age of impriſonment, inſtead of ſending for an elder prince from the mountain. The profeſſed religion of the country is chriſtianity, but mixed with many Pagan and Jewiſh ceremonies. The capital puniſhments are crucifixion, flaying alive, ſtoning, and plucking out the eyes. Long. 26. to 44. E. Greenwich. Lat. 6. to 20. N.

E. Ferro. Lat. 53. N.

ALEXANDRETTA, or Scanderoon, a ſeaport of Syria, in the pachalic of Aleppo, and particularly connected with that city; rather a village than a town, in which, ſays a traveller, tombs are more numerous than houſes. The only inducement which merchants have to trade there, is the goodneſs of the anchorage, the beſt on the coaſt, for the air is exceedingly unwholeſome, and inhabitants are every year viſited with an intermitting fever of a moſt malignant kind, principally from May to September; but the town is never wholly exempt from this dreadful peſtilence: 28 leagues W. Aleppo. Long. 54. E. Ferro. Lat. 36. 35. N.

ALEXANDRIA, a famous city and ſeaport of Egypt, built by Alexander the Great, 332 years before Chriſt. It was taken from the Chriſtians by Amrou Ebn el Aas, general of the Caliph, in the middle of the ſixth century, after a ſiege of fourteen months, in which he loſt 23,000 men. It then contained four thouſand baths, twelve thouſand venders of vegetables, four thouſand Jews, who paid tribute, &c. but what is ſtill more to be regretted in its loſs, the library, in which ſucceſſive kings had collected more than four hundred thouſand manuſcripts, all of which were ordered to be deſtroyed by this ignorant Arabian. In its modern ſtate, it is the emporium of a very conſiderable commerce, the harbour for all the commodities of Egypt, by the Mediterranean, except the rice of Damietta. The Europeans have eſtabliſhments there, where factors diſpoſe of the merchandize by barter. Veſſels are conſtantly to be met with from Marſeilles, Leghorn, Venice, Raguſa, and the dominions of the Grand Signior; but it is not ſafe to winter there. The town is ſupplied by means of a canal from Faoua, which brings the water of the Nile to reſervoirs in the time of its inundation, to ſerve the year. It is this canal which makes Alexandria a part of Egypt, for from its ſituation without the Delta, it really belongs to Lybia. The Turks call it Scanderia, or Eſcanderia: 11 leagues SW. Roſetta: 32 NNW. Cairo. Long. 47. 56. E. Ferro. Lat. 31. 11. N.

ALICANT, a ſea-port town of Spain on the Mediterranean, in the kingdom of Valencia, at the bottom of the gulph, to which it gives name. It is well built and populous. The bay is ſheltered on the eaſt by the Cape de la Huerta, and to the weſt by Cape Saint Paul, and the iſland of Tabarca. Veſſels anchor about a mile from the mole, in ſix, ſeven, eight, and ten fathom water, and may enter and go out with any wind. The mole is large and commodious. One of the circumſtances which has moſt contributed to the riches and commerce of Alicant, is the duties of entry being leſs there than at Valencia and Carthagena. This diminiſhed the commerce of theſe two cities, in favour of the former, from which all the veſſels that carry on the trade between Spain and Italy, are fitted out. The commerce conſiſts in barilla, antimony, alum, aniſeed, cumminſeed, dried fruit, wool, and wine, particularly that called Tent, or Alicant. Of 961 veſſels which arrived at this port in the year 1782, 600 were Spaniſh; the greater part Catalonians. Linens from France, Swiſſerland, and Sileſia, and camblets and woollens from France, are the chief imports. The mountain on which the caſtle is built, and at the foot of which the city ſtands, is formed of white earth, and being wiſible a great way at ſea, ſerves as a guide to pilots. The bay of Alicant is ſaid to have been the famous gulph of Ilici, ſo called from a Roman colony, now Elche; but the declining ſtate of that port, and the improvement of Alicant, gave it the name it now bears; it begins at Cape St. Martin, and terminates at Cape Palos: 26 leagues S. Valencia, and 17 NE. Carthagena. Long. 16. 10. E. Peak of Teneriffe. Lat. 38. 22. N.—In the year 1705, this town refuſing to acknowledge the archduke Charles as king, was bombarded by the Engliſh, and taken by ſtorm. In the month of December 1708, it was beſieged by the troops of king Philip, under the command of Chevalier d'Asfeldt; but no advantages being gained for three months, the chevalier ordered a rock to be undermined, and in the hollow 200 barrels of gunpowder to be conveyed. The governor of the town, Syburg, was informed of this, and ſummoned to ſurrender: after refuſing three times to capitulate, the exploſion took place, and buried the governor, and many of the officers, with 36 of the centinels, in the ruins. Notwithſtanding which, colonel d'Albon, who ſucceeded to the command, reſolved to defend the place to the laſt extremity; but the fleet which arrived, not being able to afford the garriſon any relief, he was obliged to ſurrender on the 5th of April, 1709.

AMERICA, the largeſt grand diviſion of the known world, is bounded, as far as yet has been diſcovered, on all ſides by the ocean, and extends from the 80th degree of north latitude, to the 56th ſouth, and from the 35th, to the 136th weſt longitude from Greenwich. It is divided into North and South America, united by an iſthmus, called the Iſthmus of Darien, which in the narroweſt part, is ſcarcely 60 miles acroſs, about the 7th degree of north latitude. North America comprehends the countries of Labrador, or New Britain, Canada, Nova Scotia, the United States, Louiſiana, Mexico, New Mexico, and California, with the iſlands of Newfoundland, Cape Breton, St. John, the Bermudas, the Bahama, and the Weſt India iſlands: South America is divided into the countries of Terra Firma, Guiana, Amazonia, Brazil, Paraguay, Patagonia, Chili, and Peru. To Chriſtopher Columbus, Europe is indebted for a diſcovery which has been the ſource of ſo much riches and commerce. His firſt voyage was in 1491. Neverthleſs, it received its name from Americus Veſpucius, a Florentine, who diſcovered the continent, ſouth of the line, in 1497. Under the ſame latitude, the cold of America is much greater than in the countries of Europe; it is almoſt inſupportable in Labrador, though under the ſame latitude as England; it is much greater in Canada than France, which is not farther from the Pole; and the winter of Penſilvania, is much more ſevere than that of Portugal, though under the ſame climate. North America contains few mountains; in the countries beſt known, the Apalachian, or Allegany, are the chief; but in South America, the mountains called Andes, or Cordelieres, ſurpaſs both in extent and height, thoſe of the other parts of the globe; their length, from the Iſthmus of Darien, to the Straits of Magellan, is not leſs than 1500 leagues, dividing the whole of South America into eaſt and weſt, and the greateſt height, 20,608 feet above the level of the ſea. The rivers Miſſiſſippi, Ohio, Ouabache, Hudſon, Delawar, Penobſcot, St. Lawrence, and others equal to the Danube or the Rhine, have their ſource in North America. In South America are two of the largeſt rivers in the world, the Amazon and La Plata, beſides the Oronoco, Para, Uraguay, and many others. Some of the lakes of North America, may be called ſeas of freſh water. A continent ſo vaſt, muſt naturally be various in its ſoil and productions. In the moſt northern and moſt ſouthern parts, the countries are cold, ſterile, and deſert; while in the centre, nature ſeems to have amaſſed her treaſures; here are found the richeſt metals, minerals, medicinal plants, fruits, and trees, known no where elſe; diamonds, pearls, emeralds, amethiſts, and other precious ſtones, are produced in ſuch abundance, as to leſſen their value; with other articles of inferior price, but more utility, as cochineal, indigo, ſalt-petre, log-wood, mahogany, and other valuable woods, pimento, rice, ginger, cotton, medicinal balſams, Peruvian bark, mechoacan, ſaſſafras, tamarinds, caſſia, tobacco, furs, amber, and many roots and plants, unknown before the diſcovery of this new world. In the midſt of this abundance, America wanted a great many things uſeful and neceſſary; the Europeans found neither corn, wine, or oil; the inhabitants, for the moſt part, ate only roots and fruits; their only drink water; they had neither ſheep, goats, cows, aſſes, or horſes. The inſects are numerous and offenſive; their reptiles, many of them venomous, and their bite mortal. The birds of America are ſaid to be leſs beautiful than thoſe of Aſia and Africa, but their notes are more melodious and more varied. The ſeas, the lakes, and the rivers, are remarkable for the variety and number of their fiſh. The native Americans, in general, are of a copper colour, their hair black, thick, long, and without curl; in ſtature tall, ſtraight, and well proportioned; their viſage, broad, and features regular, but often disfigured by the means they uſe to appear more beautiful or more terrible; their vices are inſenſibility, hardneſs of heart, and love of revenge; their virtues are courage, attachment to their country, and a conſtant ſentiment, which renders them always contented with their condition: their principal enjoyments ſeem to be dancing, gaming, and drinking. Subordination ſeems very imperfect, their chiefs have little authority, eſpecially in peace; wars are frequent, and their ſpirit of revenge makes them often commit atrocious actions. From this general deſcription of the American natives, we muſt however, except the two empires of Mexico and Peru. As to their religion, they all ſeem more or leſs to have an idea of a ſuperior and inviſible being, and a future ſtate. If this, however, be the character of the uneducated Indians, Europe has, from her cities, furniſhed colonies, ſome of which have, and the reſt in time will, become independent ſtates, and rival, if not excel the old world in commerce and in arts, but theſe times cannot probably be near.

ANTULLY, a town of France, in the department of the Saone and Loire, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Autun: 5 miles SE. Autun.

ANTWERP, the capital of a marquiſate in Brabant, is ſituated in a large plain, on the eaſtern ſide of the Scheldt, which has here ſufficient depth and width to admit veſſels of great burthen cloſe to the quay, and even by means of canals cut through the town, veſſels may be brought to unload at the very doors. The commerce of this city rather more than two centuries ago, was ſuperior to that of any other ſtate in Europe, 2,500 merchant veſſels arriving in its port in one year; and it is recorded in the annals of the place, that the value of the merchandize imported in the year 1550, amounted to 133 millions of gold; and as a proof of the riches and magnificence of its merchants, they relate that a certain merchant named John Daens, having lent the emperor Charles the V. a million of gold, invited him to dinner; when after a royal entertainment, he threw the emperor's bond into the fire, made of cinnamon. But ſince that time, when the United Provinces threw off the yoke of the Spaniſh government, having got poſſeſſion of the entrance of the Scheldt, they built forts on the ſides, and ſunk obſtructions in the channel to prevent a free navigation; in conſequence of which the commerce of Antwerp has been ruined, and graſs grows before the warehouſes of thoſe who had been the greateſt merchants in the univerſe. It is ſtill however a large and handſome city, and the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of the archbiſhop of Malines. The ſtreets are in general wide and ſtraight, and ſurrounded by a wall and regular fortifications: the citadel, of a pentagon form, was built by order of the duke of Alva, on a riſing ground, to keep the citizens in awe. During the civil wars in the 16th century, this city ſuffered conſiderably. In 1566, the Proteſtants pillaged the churches with extreme fury. In 1576, the Spaniſh ſoldiers mutinied on account of their pay, and joined the rebels, ſurpriſed the city, and made dreadful ſlaughter of the inhabitants; the townhouſe, and many other magnificent buildings, with 600 houſes were burned to aſhes, and upwards of 10,000 perſons killed and wounded. This calamity began on the 4th of November, and the pillage of the city continued three days. In the year 1585, the city took part with the prince of Orange, and was commanded by Philip de Marnix, baron of Ste. Aldegonde, who had been the prince's confidential friend, and one in whom the citizens eſpecially repoſed great faith. The prince of Parma was at that time general of the Spaniſh forces, and laid ſiege to Antwerp. Never, they ſay, was a place better attacked, or better defended; but at the end of a year, being driven to great diſtreſs for want of proviſions, the beſieged were obliged to capitulate, and the ſovereignty of the king of Spain was again acknowledged at Antwerp. After this the proteſtants, to avoid the government of an arbitrary Catholic prince, removed with their families and effects to Amſterdam and other places, where they might be allowed liberty of conſcience, and a free exerciſe of their religion. This was the firſt blow to the commerce of Antwerp, and from this time that of Amſterdam increaſed, which laſt city it is ſaid uſed every underhand method in its power to prevent aſſiſtance being given to her rival during the ſiege. At the treaty of Munſter, when a peace was concluded between Philip IV, and the United Provinces, when the independence of thoſe provinces was acknowledged and guaranteed, Antwerp ſeems to have fallen a ſacrifice for a peace offering; for, by an article of that treaty, it was agreed, that no large merchant veſſel ſhould ſail up to Antwerp, without firſt unloading her cargo in one of the ports of Holland, from whence the merchandize might be conveyed to Antwerp in barges, or ſmall veſſels. This gave a death blow to its commerce, ſince which it has never revived. The late emperor, Joſeph, made a pretence again opening the navigation of the Scheldt, but for want of reſolution, conduct, or power, the ſcheme proved abortive. The late threatened plan of opening the Scheldt by the French, which was, at leaſt, the oſtenſible reaſon for England's taking up arms, is well known. The navigation was declared free in the month of Auguſt 1794. Antwerp was taken by the French in November, 1792, and the citadel ſurrendered priſoners of war the 29th of that month; the French evacuated it in March following. In July 1794, it ſurrendered to the republican troops again: 25 miles N. Bruſſels, and 75 S. Amſterdam. Long. 21. 58. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 12. N.

On the decline of the Roman empire, when the Barbarians invaded Italy, this country became ſubject firſt to the Goths, then to the Lombards, and the latter choſe Aoſta for the capital of a duchy, at the ſame time that they named Turin the capital of another duchy. On the deſtruction of the kingdom of Lombardy, Aoſta came under the power of the French and the Burgundians, from whom it paſſed to the marquis of Ivrea, lieutenant general of the army of the German emperor, on the confines of Italy. It came at length to the houſe of Savoy, either by grant or deſcent. The town is ſurrounded with a wall, which is much decayed. It is the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of the archbiſhop of Tarentaiſe. Beſides the cathedral, it has one collegiate and three pariſh churches. ARABIA, one of the moſt conſiderable countries of Aſia, is bounded on the weſt by the Red Sea, the Iſthmus of Suez, Paleſtine, and Syria; on the north by the Euphrates, on the eaſt by the gulf of Perſia and the ſea, and on the ſouth by the Straits of Babelmandel and the ſea. Europeans have divided it into three parts, named from their ſuppoſed qualities, Arabia Deſerta, Arabia Petræa, and Arabia Felix. Arabia extends from Lat. 12. 30. to 31. 30. N. and from Long. 52. to 77. E. Ferro, about 1350 miles from N. to S. and 1620 from E. to W. In ſome provinces of Arabia, the heat is exceſſive; but, in this country, as in moſt others, the varying degrees of elevation, the relative ſituations of places, and the nature of the ſoil, occaſion conſiderable varieties of temperature. In the deſerts, diverſified here and there only by bare rocks, and in theſe flat plains, there is nothing to ſoften the force of the ſun's rays, but all vegetables are burnt up, and the ſoil is every where reduced to ſand. In the interior country, the temperature of the atmoſphere is very different. The great ranges of lofty mountains attract vapours, and theſe falling down in plenteous rains, cool the air and quicken vegetation. The cold occaſioned by the height of the country, produces falls of ſnow, but this never lies long upon the ground. The rainy ſeaſons, which are regular in the countries between the tropics, are diverſified here. Weſtward, in Yemen, the rainy ſeaſon comes on in the month of June, and terminates in the middle of September. In the eaſtern part of theſe mountains, thoſe rains fall between the middle of the month of November, and the middle of February. In Hadramaut and Oman, to the ſouth, the rainy ſeaſon laſts from the middle of February to the middle of April. Theſe regular rains render the vallies lying among the mountains fertile and delightful. Arabia enjoys the proſpect of conſtant verdure, not but that moſt of the trees ſhed their leaves, and the annual plants wither, and are reproduced; but the interval between the fall of the leaf in one year, and the reproduction of new leaves for the next, is ſo ſhort, that the change is hardly obſervable. Continual verdure is peculiar to thoſe countries in which there are no froſts, but a rainy ſeaſon inſtead of our winter. From the ſingular local ſituation of Arabia, the inequalities in the nature of its lands may, without farther information, be inferred. Theſe inequalities are indeed very remarkable; on one ſide are frightful deſerts, and on the other fertile and delightful vales. The ſandy belt which encircles this peninſula, is almoſt entirely barren, and preſents one unvaried picture of deſolation. This belt, denominated Tehama, begins at Suez, and extends round the whole peninſula, to the mouth of the Euphrates. It bears every mark of having been anciently a part of the bed of the ſea. It contains large ſtrata of ſalt, which in ſome places even riſe up into hills. The product of Arabia is aloes, caſſia, ſpikenard, frankincenſe, myrrh, manna, and other valuable gums; cinnamon, pepper, cardamom, dates, oranges, lemons, pomegranates, figs, and other fruits; honey and wax in plenty; and in their ſeas, they have great quantities of the beſt coral and pearls. In Arabia, are abundance of all the domeſtic animals common in hot countries. The Arabians breed horſes, mules, aſſes, camels, dromedaries, cows, buffaloes, ſheep, and goats. In the fertile provinces, wild fowls are ſo plentiful, that they are ſold at a trifling price. Of all their domeſtic animals, it is well known that the Arabians put the greateſt value on their horſes. Of theſe they have two great branches, the Kadiſchi, whoſe deſcent is unknown, and the Kochlani, of whom a written genealogy has been kept for 2000 years. The Kadiſchi are in no better eſtimation than our European horſes, and are uſually employed in bearing burthens, and in ordinary labour. The Kochlani are reſerved for riding ſolely. They are highly eſteemed, and conſequently very dear. They are ſaid to have derived their origin from king Solomon's ſtuds: however this may be, they are fit to bear the greateſt fatigues, and can paſs whole days without food. They are alſo ſaid to ſhow uncommon courage againſt an enemy: it is even aſſerted that when a horſe of this race finds himſelf wounded, and unable to bear his rider much longer, he retires from the fray, and conveys him to a place of ſecurity. If the rider falls upon the ground, his horſe remains beſide him, and neighs till aſſiſtance is brought. Among the wild animals, are rock goats, gazelles, or antelopes, jerboas, monkeys without tails, leopards, ounces, wild boars, wolves, and foxes; tame fowls are very plentiful, and all ſorts of poultry in great abundance; eagles, falcons, and vultures, are met with in Arabia; there are ſeveral ſorts of ſerpents, ſome noxious and ſome innocent, but the moſt formidable is that called bætan, a ſmall ſlender creature, whoſe bite is inſtant death. Among the inſects may be reckoned locuſts, which are ſometimes brought from the deſerts of Lybia in ſuch multitudes, as to darken the air, and appear at a diſtance like clouds of ſmoke. The noiſe they make in flying is frightful and ſtunning, like that of a water-fall. When ſuch a ſwarm falls upon a field, it is waſted and deſpoiled of its verdure. The pulſe and date trees ſuffer greatly from the locuſt, but the corn, either ripe or nearly ſo, is too hard for their uſe, and they are obliged to ſpare it. A ſmall inſect, named Arda, of the bulk of a grain of barley, is another ſcourge of Arabia, and of hot countries in general. On account of ſome general reſemblance, many travellers repreſent this inſect as an ant, and ſpeak of it under this name. Its inſtinct diſpoſes it to travel only by night, through a ſort of galleries, which it forms as it proceeds, of fat earth; after reaching the end of its journey, it corrodes and deſtroys every thing, victuals, clothes, and furniture. They live and work together like ants.

ARABIA DESERTA, now called Berii Arbiſtan, and Beriara, is bounded on the eaſt by Diarbekir and the Perſian province of Irak, on the north by Syria and the river Euphrates, on the weſt by Paleſtine and Arabia Petræa, and on the ſouth by Arabia Felix. This country is for the moſt part deſert, being interſected almoſt every where by high barren mountains, and many of its plains nothing but great ſands and heaths, through ſome of which neither men, beaſts, birds, trees, graſs, or paſture, are to be ſeen: the lands, however, that lie to the eaſt along the river Euphrates, afford both plants and food for the inhabitants of ſome cities and towns ſeated on that part; and there are ſome plains and vallies that feed great numbers of ſheep, goats, and other ſmall cattle, which love to browze upon ſuch dry lands; but larger cattle, except camels, can find here no ſubſiſtence. The method of the inhabitants of the deſert, is to ſeek after freſh paſtures near rivers, lakes, or other places where they can find water for themſelves and cattle; and when they have cleared the ground, to look out for another. They acknowledge no other government than that of their own emirs or princes; and ſeldom, if ever, have any commerce, much leſs alliance, with the Turks and Moors, whom they look upon as baſtards, and the uſurpers of their inheritance. Their emirs have each of them a certain number of cheikhs under them, according to the extent of their dominions. Some of theſe Arabs, by the name of Bedoui, have ſpread themſelves as far as Egypt, roving from place to place with their wives, children, and cattle. The children go quite naked, the women wear only a kind of blue long ſhift, and the men a coarſe long jacket, reaching down to their knees. They all profeſs the Mahometan religion, but give themſelves little trouble about the diſputed meanings of the Alcoran. They have neither laws, lawyers, nor judges, amongſt them. The cheikhs reconcile all their differences, and the emir is the only perſon to whom they appeal from their ſentence: Ana is the capital.

ARABIA PETRÆA, or the Stony, the moſt weſtern of all the Arabias, is bounded on the north by Paleſtine, on the eaſt by Arabia

Deſerta and part of Arabia Felix, on the ſouth by Arabia Felix, and on the weſt by the Red Sea and the Iſthmus of Suez; its extent from north to ſouth computed to be 180 miles, and from eaſt to weſt 150. It was called Petræa, or Stony, from its rocks, though ſome rather derive it from Petra, its ancient capital, now commonly ſuppoſed to be Harach, or Horac, lying on the iſthmus, near the frontiers of Egypt. Though, in moſt reſpects, it much reſembles Arabia Deſerta for its ſtony, ſandy, and barren ground, yet it yields, in ſome parts, ſufficient nouriſhment for cattle, whoſe milk and camel's fleſh is the chief food of its inhabitants. There are ſome other parts which are quite uninhabited and impaſſable.

ARABIA FELIX, or The Happy, by far the moſt conſiderable of the three, is called by the inhabitants Yemam, or Yaman; it was called Felix, or Happy, according to Ammianus Marcellinus, becauſe it abounded in corn, cattle, vines, and odoriferous ſpices of all kinds. It was alſo called Sacred, on account of the fine gums and aromatic woods employed in ſacrifices, which it produced.—Felix, or Happy, is, according to Nieubuhr, a title unknown to the Arabians, who divide the country into ſix provinces, viz. Hedjas, Yemen, Hadramaut, Oman, Lachſa, or Hadsjar, and Nedsjid; the principal cities are Mecca, Medina, Mocha, Loheia, &c.

ARABKIR, a town of Aſia, in the province of Caramania: 105 miles SE. Yurcup.

ARACAN, or Arrakan, or Reccan, a country of Aſia, bounded on the north by Meckley, on the eaſt by Burmah, on the ſouth by Pegu, and on the weſt by the Bay of Bengal, about 510 miles long, and from 20 to 200 broad. The air is good, the country abounds with meadows and paſture lands, well watered with rivers and brooks; the plains are exceedingly fertile, and the mountains green all the year round, though from Auguſt to October, which is their winter, the weather is for the moſt part wet and ſtormy. It produces great quantities of rice, cocoa nuts, bananas, oranges, and many other kinds of excellent fruit. The people of Aracan trade very little by ſea, what trade they have is brought home to them by merchants of diſtant countries; the principal articles of ſale are lead, tin, ſticklack, elephants, and elephants' teeth, and ſometimes precious ſtones; this commerce is carried on by the Mahometans, who are ſettled here in great numbers. The inhabitants are idolaters, and worſhip devoutly their images, made of clay baked in the ſun. The principal city is Aracan; and the principal river bears the ſame name.

ARACAN, a city of Aſia, and capital of a country of the ſame name, containing about 100,000 inhabitants; a river, called alſo Aracan, runs through it, and waters the ſtreets by means of ſeveral arms or canals, into which it is divided. It is bounded on the north by the Pyrenées, which ſeparate it from France; on the north-weſt by Navarre; on the weſt by Caſtile; on the ſouth by Valencia; and on the eaſt by Catalonia. It contains 70 towns, only 8 of which are conſiderable, viz. Saragoſſa, Albarazin, Balbaſtro, Calataiud, Daroca, Jacca, Taraçona, and Teruel. The rivers are the Ebro, Cinca, Segra, Gallego, Iſuela, Xalon, Xiloca, Aragon, and ſome other ſmall ones. The air is pure and ſerene, but it often wants water, having neither ſprings or wells, ſo that the principal ſupply is from rain preſerved in ciſterns. The country is generally dry, ſandy, mountainous, and ſtony. Some of the valleys are, however, very fertile, and produce wheat, flax, ſaffron, grapes, olives, and other fruits; ſalt mines abound, and it is ſuppoſed that mines of ſilver were wrought formerly, as we read that the Roman general Marcellus exacted from this country, a contribution of 300 talents of that metal, and Gracchus deſtroyed 300 towns, a proof of the wealth and multitude of the inhabitants.

In the crevice of a rock there is a place, called by the ſailors The Poſt-Office, where ſhips leave letters for each other, ſhut up in a well-corked bottle, which the next that comes breaks open, and leaves another in its ſtead. Long. 14. 28. W. Greenwich. Lat. 8. S. Captain Cook, who ſtopped here in the year 1775, ſays, the iſland of Aſcenſion is about 10 miles in length, in the direction of north-weſt and ſouth-eaſt, and about 5 or 6 in breadth. It ſhows a ſurface compoſed of barren hills and vallies, on the moſt of which not a ſhrub or plant is to be ſeen for ſeveral miles, and where we found nothing but ſtones and ſand, or rather flags and aſhes; an indubitable ſign that the iſle, at ſome remote time, has been deſtroyed by a volcano, which has thrown up vaſt heaps of ſtones, and even hills. A high mountain at the ſouth-eaſt end of the iſle, ſeems to be left in its original ſtate, and to have eſcaped the general deſtruction; its ſoil is a kind of white marl, which yet retains its vegetative qualities, and produces a kind of purſlain, ſpurge, and one or two graſſes: on theſe the goats ſubſiſt, and it is at this part of the iſle where they are to be found, as alſo land-crabs which are ſaid to be very good. I was told, that about this part of the iſle is ſome very good land, on which might be raiſed many neceſſary articles; and ſome have been at the trouble of ſowing turnips, and other uſeful vegetables.

ASIA, one of the quarters of the world, and inferior in ſize only to America, ſurpaſſing in extent Europe and Africa taken together, lies to the eaſt of Europe. It was ſo called, if we are to believe the Greeks, curious in ſearching after the etymology of words, from Aſia, daughter of Oceanus and Thetis; others ſay that it derived its name from Aſius, the ſon of Atys, king of Lydia; while Bochart is of opinion, that it took its name from the Phenician word Aſi, ſignifying the middle: but all this is mere conjecture. This part of the world has the advantage of having been the reſidence of the firſt man, and of having ſent colonies, which have peopled the reſt of the world. Here man received the laws from God, and here the Saviour of mankind paſſed the whole of his mortal life; many of the greateſt empires have been eſtabliſhed in this part of the world: firſt, the empire of the Chaldeans or Aſſyrians; then that of the Medes, founded by Arbaces, which ended in Aſtyages; from whom it was removed to the Perſians by Cyrus, until the death of Darius; then to the Greeks or Macedonians, under Alexander the Great; after him the Parthians, the Perſians, the Turks and Saracens, and the Moguls have each been powerful. At preſent it is divided into ſeven principal parts, Aſiatic Turkey, Arabia, Perſia, India, China, Tartary, and Siberia; to which may be added a great number of iſlands, ſuch as the iſlands of Japan, the Ladrone iſlands, the Philippine iſlands, the Moluccas, Amboyna, Banda, Celebes, Borneo, Sumatra, Java, Ceylon, Andaman, Nicobar, Maldive, &c. Aſia is bounded on the north by the Frozen Sea, on the eaſt by the North Pacific Ocean and the ſea of China, on the ſouth by the Indian and Arabian Seas, on the weſt it is ſeparated from Africa, by the Red Sea, and the Iſthmus of Suez; and from Europe by the Archipelago, the Straits of Gallipoli, the Sea of Marmora, the Straits of Conſtantinople, the Black Sea, and from thence by an imaginary line to the Frozen Ocean, between 60 and 70 degrees of E. Long. from London. Its ſuppoſed extent is about 1600 leagues from the Straits of Gallipoli in the weſt, to the eaſtern ſhore of Tartary, and near 1500. from the ſouthern extremity of Malacca, to the Frozen Ocean. There muſt be a great variety of climates in a country of ſo vaſt an extent, as well as ſoil and produce; yet, on the whole, if we except part of Arabia and Tartary, and ſome of the more northern tracks, it is in general rich and fruitful, and ſome parts of it exceedingly ſo. The principal religions are Mahometaniſm and Paganiſm; to which may be added Chriſtianity of the Greek Church, and the doctrine of Zoroaſter: the principal languages are Arabic, Perſic, Tartaric, Chineſe, Japoneſe, Malayan and Malabaric.

ASTRACHAN, a city of Aſia, and ſee of a biſhop, ſituated on an iſland at the mouth of the Volga, in the Ruſſian government of Caucaſus, about 14 leagues from the Caſpian Sea. It is a league in circumference, ſurrounded with a wall. Peter the Great deſigned it for the centre of commerce, and the greateſt mart of the world. Its ſituation is well calculated for ſuch a grand deſign, being as it were the boundary of Aſia and Europe. By means of the Caſpian Sea and the Volga, merchandiſe may be brought from Perſia, Armenia, India, &c. and conveyed to the ports of the Baltic, and vice verſa. It is inhabited by Ruſſians, Armenians, Greeks, Perſians, Engliſh, French, Indians, and Jews. Prodigious quantities of ſalt are made in its neighbourhood. Fiſh of many ſorts are plentiful and good; and the melons produced here equal thoſe of Perſia. The buildings are chiefly of wood, except the cathedral and a few other churches. Iwan Baſilowitz took this city from the Tartars in the year 1554. In 1670, it was ſeized by the rebel Stenkorazin; but he ſoon after ſuffered death at Moſcow. It was once the capital of a kingdom of the ſame name, now divided between the government of Caucaſus and the government of Saratov; 330 miles SSE. Saratov, 1040 SSE. Peterſburg. Long. 65. 38. E. This ſpot, which was anciently environed with impaſſable marſhes and moraſſes, will be ever memorable for the retreat of king Alfred, from the fury of the Danes, who in tumultuous numbers had overrun the eaſtern part of his dominions. The regiſter of Athelney ſets forth, that Alfred, after having bravely encountered his enemies for nine ſucceſſive years, was at length reduced to the neceſſity of fleeing from them, and taking refuge in the Iſle of Athelney. The place that lodged him was a ſmall cottage belonging to St. Athelwine, formerly an hermit here, the ſon of king Kynegilſus. After his emerſion from this retirement, and the total defeat of his enemies, he founded a monaſtery for Benedictine monks on the ſpot which had given him ſhelter, endowing the eſtabliſhment with the whole iſle of Athelney, exempt from taxes and all burdens: 1 mile ENE. ATLAS, (Great and Little) mountains of Africa: the Great Atlas extends from the deſert of Barca, about 80 leagues weſt of Alexandria, to the coaſt of the Atlantic ſea, to which it gives name, but often changes its name, according to the multitude of countries it runs through, and the plains and valleys by which it is interſected; it is called by the natives Ayduacal. The Little Atlas extends from the Straits of Gibraltar to Bona, in the country of Algiers, and is called by the natives Erriff. Both theſe are of ſuch vaſt height, and for the moſt part covered with ſnow, as to be ſeen at a great diſtance off at ſea. The higheſt parts and moſt difficult of acceſs are thoſe which run along the confines of the kingdom of Tremecen, and the coldeſt thoſe that bound the dominions of Morocco. As to the generality of the reſt, they enjoy a much kinder climate, and are not only inhabited by various tribes of Berebers, Arabs, and other African people, but, in many places, well cultivated and fertilized, and a number of towns and villages diſperſed in them, well inhabited, and ſtored with abundance of cattle; though in many of theſe they are obliged not only to retire into their caverns all the winter ſeaſon, which is there very long, but to take in with them all their numerous herds, which would otherwiſe periſh with cold.

BALBECK, a town of Aſiatic Turkey, in Syria, celebrated by the ancients under the name of Heliopolis, is ſituated at the foot of the Anti-Libanus. There are now to be ſeen large remains of one of the moſt beautiful temples in the world, ſuppoſed to have been dedicated to the worſhip of the ſun; both the ancient and preſent name of the place, ſignifies the City of the Sun; but by whom or when built is not accurately determined. In the time of Auguſtus, it was a garriſon town of the Romans; and the preſent temple is ſaid to have been built by Antoninus Pius, inſtead of the ancient one gone to decay. Under Conſtantine it was neglected, and ſoon after turned into a Chriſtian church, and continued ſo till the irruption of the Arabs; after that the church fell to decay, battlements were built round it, and from that time being expoſed to the fate of war, it fell rapidly to ruins. The ſtate of the city is not leſs deplorable; added to the wretched government of the Turks, an earthquake in 1759, completed its deſtruction. The inhabitants were computed at 5000 in 1751, which in the year 1784, were reduced to leſs than 1200, poor and indolent, cultivating a little cotton, maize, and water-melons, for their ſubſiſtance: 110 miles S. Bâle, or Baſle, the name of one of the cantons of Swiſſerland, and the ninth in the order, and the firſt of thoſe called New. It is about eight leagues long, and rather more than five broad, bounded on the ſouth-weſt, ſouth, and ſouth-eaſt by the canton of Soleure, on the north-eaſt by the territory of Rhenfelden, one of the foreſt towns, and on the north-weſt by France.

Bâle (Biſhopric of), a principality of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, is bounded on the north by the Sundgaw, on the weſt by France, on the ſouth and eaſt by the cantons of Bâle, Berne, and Soleure; beginning at the lake Bienne, and croſſing Mount Jura, it reaches almoſt to the city of Bâle; about 24 leagues in length, and 16 in breadth. A defenſive alliance was made between the ſeven Roman Catholic cantons, and the biſhop of Bâle, in 1579, which was ſolemnly renewed in 1655, 1695, and 1712. According to the matricula of imperial contributions, as ordered in the year 1521, the biſhop ought to furniſh 15 foot and two horſemen, or 84 florins monthly, at his own choice. The eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction extends to the dioceſes of Lauſanne, Conſtance, Straſburg, Toul, and Beſançon, and contains ſix towns of which Porentrui, the reſidence of the biſhop, and Delemont are the chief, and 170 ſmaller towns and villages. The ſee was firſt founded at Augſt, and from thence removed to Bâle: the biſhop is elected by the canons of the church, of which there are 18, who ought to be of noble families, and Germans. After the canons have made their election, and their choice is confirmed by the pope, the emperor inveſts him in his temporalities. The country is fertile, and a great number of forges are employed in manufactures of iron and ſteel. The militia amount to 11,000, divided into nine regiments.

Bâle, the chief place of a canton, and largeſt city of Swiſſerland, conſiſts of two towns, built on both ſides of the Rhine, which here forms a large and deep ſtream, on a declivity favourable for navigation, and communicating with each other by means of a bridge, 600 feet in length: they are both defended with walls, towers and ditches. To the largeſt town are annexed five conſiderable fauxbourgs. The cathedral is a fine gothic ſtructure, and contains among other monuments, the tomb of Eraſmus. There are ſix parochial churches, and ſeven convents ſeculariſed at the reformation. The univerſity was founded in the year 1459, or 1460, by pope Pius II. In the town-houſe and public library, are ſeveral paintings by Hans Holbein, a native of this place. The magiſtracy is a mixture of ariſtocracy and democracy, in which the former preponderate; a cuſtom peculiar to Bâle, is, that the clocks of the town are always an hour too faſt. The environs are fertile, and the climate ſofter than the countries round, ſo that they ſend early fruit and vegetables as an article of trade to the diſtance of 20 leagues. Three melancholy epochas are marked in the annals of Bâle; an earthquake in the year 1356, which deſtroyed a great number of houſes; and two malignant fevers; one in 1314, which carried off 11,000 perſons, and another in 1564, when 7000 died. The principal manufactures are ribbons, ſilk ſtuffs, painted linens, gloves, and cutlery. The biſhop has had no power in Bâle, ſince the time of the reformation in 1519, when the biſhop and chapter were compelled to quit the town, and have from that time reſided at Porentrui: 15½ poſts S. Straſburg, and 59½ ESE. Paris. Long. 25. 15. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. 40. N.

BARBADOES, one of the Charaibean or Caribbee Iſlands, and the moſt eaſtern of the Weſt India Iſlands; it is ſaid, was firſt diſcovered by the Portugueſe, from whom it received its preſent name; the Portugueſe, however, made no ſettlement, only furniſhing it with a breed of ſwine for future navigators. It had no inhabitants, and was much overgrown with wood, when it was viſited by the crew of an Engliſh ſhip in the year 1605, who took poſſeſſion of it in the name of king James: they found pigs, pigeons, and parrots, and the ſea abounded with fiſh. Some years afterwards a ſettlement was made by Sir W. Courteen, a merchant of London; and, in the year 1624, the foundation of Jameſtown was laid. The earl of Marlborough obtained a grant of this iſland to himſelf and heirs in perpetuity, and was moſt probably the patron of this firſt ſettlement. The earl of Carliſle, who was at the ſame time engaged in the eſtabliſhment of a colony in the iſland of St. Chriſtopher, laid a claim to it, and in the firſt year of Charles I. obtained a grant of all the Charaibean iſlands, including alſo Barbadoes; this being diſputed by the earl of Marlborough, was at laſt ſettled by an engagement of the earl of Carliſle to pay to the earl of Marlborough and his heirs for ever the yearly ſum of 300 pounds, but the intereſt of the merchant who formed the ſettlement was forgotten. The new proprietor diſtributed lands to ſuch perſons who choſe to receive grants on the terms propoſed: a ſociety of merchants accepted 10,000 acres on conditions that promiſed great advantage to the proprietor: a perſon appointed to preſide, with 64 perſons, each of whom was authoriſed to take up 100 acres of land, arrived in the iſland in the year 1628, at which time Courteen's ſettlement began to flouriſh: but they declared it an encroachment and uſurpation, and Sir William Tufton arriving the year following, as chief governor, with a force ſufficient, he compelled the friends of Courteen to ſubmit. During the civil war, Barbadoes took a decided part in favour of the unfortunate Charles I. The republic parliament, angry with the inhabitants of Barbadoes, ſent out a fleet under Sir George Ayſcue in 1651, and ſucceeded ſo far as to get the republic acknowledged, but at the ſame time it was agreed that the juriſdiction of the iſland ſhould be continued in the governor, council, and aſſembly, according to the cuſtom of the iſland; the aſſembly to be choſen by the freeholders; and no taxes to be levied on the inhabitants without their conſent in a general aſſembly. The parliament had intended an act, by which all foreign veſſels were to be prohibited from trading with the Engliſh plantations, and no goods to be imported into England, or any of its dependencies, in any other than Engliſh bottoms, or in ſhips of that nation of which the merchandize imported was the growth or manufacture; and thus aroſe the famous navigation act, for immediately after the reſtoration, the plan was adopted by Charles II. with this addition, that the maſter and three-fourths of the ſeamen ſhould be Engliſh ſubjects. The proprietary government was diſſolved, the legiſlation of the iſland veſted in the crown, and a duty of 4½ per cent. to be paid in ſpecie, laid on all dead commodities, the growth of the iſland, ſhipped to any part of the world. Barbadoes is 21 miles long, and 14 broad, and contains 106,470 acres of land, moſt part of which is cultivated. The ſoil in the low lands is black; in the ſhallow parts inclining to red; on the hills chalky; and near the ſea coaſt moſtly ſandy. In the year 1670, we are aſſured, that Barbadoes contained 50,000 whites, and 100,000 black inhabitants; perhaps this account may be exaggerated, but by an authentic account, the number of whites in the year 1724, was no more than 18,295: and in the year 1753, the number of blacks was 69,870. In the year 1786, there were 16,167 whites, 838 free people of colour, and 62,115 negroes. On an average, from the year 1740 to 1748, the exports were 13,948 hogſheads of ſugar, of 15 cwt. each; 12,881 puncheons of rum, of 100 gallons each; 60 hogſheads of molaſſes; 4667 bags of ginger; 600 bags of cotton, and 327 gourds of aloes. The exports on an average for 1784, 1785, 1786, were 9554 hogſheads of ſugar, 5448 puncheons of rum, 6320 bags of ginger, and 8331 bags of cotton, beſides ſmaller articles, as aloes, ſweetmeats, &c. That the dreadful ſucceſſion of hurricanes with which it hath pleaſed the Almighty to viſit this, and the other Weſt Indian Iſlands, within the laſt 12 years, has contributed to this great defalcation, cannot be doubted. The capital of this iſland was ſcarce riſen from the aſhes to which it had been reduced by two dreadful fires, when it was torn from its foundations, and the whole country made a ſcene of deſolation, by the ſtorm of the 10th of October, 1780, in which no leſs than 4326 of the inhabitants (blacks and whites) miſerably periſhed, and the damage to the country was computed at 1,320,564l. 15s. ſterling. Barbadoes is divided into five diſtricts, and eleven pariſhes, and contains four towns, Bridgetown, Oſtins, or Charleſtown, St. James's, and Spaights-town.—The governor's chief reſidence is near Bridgetown: his ſalary 2000l. a year. The climate is very hot, but the air pure; and though it does not generate any land-wind, the heat is moderated by the conſtant trade winds. Its products are, beſides what is mentioned, the palm, tamarinds, figs, aloes, bananoes, cedar, maſtich, cacao, papas, guavas, and palmettoes. Long. 59. W. Greenwich. Lat. 13. 10. N.

BARBANA, a town of Iſtria: 7 miles NNE. Pola.

BARBANO, a ſmall iſland in the northern part of the Adriatic, near the coaſt of Friuli. Long. 31. 14. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 45. N.

BARBARY, a large country of Africa, is bounded on the north by the Mediterranean Sea, on the eaſt by Egypt and the deſerts of Lybia, on the ſouth by Sahara or the deſert, and on the weſt by the Atlantic Ocean: its utmoſt extent, from eaſt to weſt, 1200 miles, and its breadth, from north to ſouth 320, but the breadth is leſs or more in different places. It is uſually divided into five kingdoms, Morocco, Fez, Algiers, Tunis, and Tripoli; the whole ſituated under the temperate zone. All the coaſt and mountains on the ſide of the Mediterranean, from the Straits of Gibraltar to Egypt, are rather cold than hot, and ſnow falls at certain times of the year: the rainy ſeaſon commences about the middle of October throughout all Barbary; the months of December and January are more ſevere, nevertheleſs the cold is not ſo great as to render a fire neceſſary: the cold diminiſhes from January, and the ſeaſon is then ſo inconſtant, that it often changes three or four times a day; the weſt and north winds blow with violence during the month of March. In April all the trees begin to bloom, and at the end of the ſame month they gather ripe cherries, in Fez, Algiers, and Tunis, and in ſome places of Morocco. In the middle of May they gather figs. In the mountains and foreſts of Barbary are found a great quantity of wild beaſts, lions, tygers, apes, and wild goats, a variety of birds and ſerpents. All the ſtates which compoſe what we call Barbary, have a number of ports on the Mediterranean, and the kingdom of Morocco and Fez have ſome on the Atlantic, which ſerve equally for the commerce of the Chriſtians, and the retreat of the veſſels of the corſairs. The merchants of Europe have magazines in the principal ſea-port towns. The chief articles of commerce are oſtrich feathers, gold duſt, indigo, dates, raiſins, ſkins tanned and not tanned, copper in bars, wax, tin, wool, Morocco leather, coral, wheat, beans, millet, and horſes. The commerce of horſes and grain is not allowed at all places, and forbidden in the kingdoms of Fez and Morocco, unleſs in exchange for arms and ammunition of war. The merchants of Europe carry thither cloths of France, Spain, England, and Holland; muſlins, ſpices, drugs, cotton, tobacco, ſugar, logwood, ſulphur, paper, ſteel, iron, lead, and cutlery of all kinds. The inhabitants of Barbary conſiſt of three different races of men, the Africans, natives; Turks, who come to ſeek their fortunes; and Arabians, who chiefly dwell in the deſerts: the Africans again are divided into whites and blacks; the former of which are thoſe who inhabit the ſea-ports, and country along the coaſt; and the latter thoſe who reſide in the inland country: they are all Mahometans.

The chief towns are Derna, the capital and reſidence of the Sangiac, Tolomata, and Grena, or Curen.

BARCAROTA, a town of Spain, in Eſtramadura, 4 miles from Almendral.

BARCELONA, a city and ſea-port of Spain, capital of Catalonia, and ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of the archbiſhop of Taragona; it is ſaid to have been built by the Carthaginian Hamilcar, the father of Hannibal, 250 years before Chriſt, and is now one of the largeſt and handſomeſt cities in Spain: its population is in proportion to its ſize, and the induſtry of the inhabitants far exceeds that of thoſe of any other part of Spain. It is built in the form of a ſemicircle, on the bank of the ſea in a large plain, and is divided into Old and New Town, ſeparated from each other by a wall, and the whole defended by thick walls, baſtions, horn-works, large and lofty ramparts, and deep ditches; with a citadel built on a mountain called Montjoui; it is however too extenſive to be eaſily guarded and defended, on which account it has always been taken when attacked. In the year 1640, the Catalans, having ſhaken off the yoke of the Spaniards, called in the French, who continued maſters of Barcelona till 1652, when it was retaken during the civil wars of France, after a ſiege of 15 months. In 1697, it was again taken by the French, under the command of the duke de Vendome, and reſtored the ſame year by the peace of Ryſwick. Notwithſtanding the inhabitants of Barcelona took the oath of fidelity to the King of Spain, Philip V. in perſon, and received from him a confirmation of their privileges, they invited the Engliſh and Dutch, and the governor was obliged to ſurrender up the town in 1705, when Charles, afterwards Emperor, was received and proclaimed King. The year following, Philip, aſſiſted by the French, aſſailed the town, and took the fortreſs of Montjoui, but the fleet of the allies coming to the ſuccour of the beſieged, he was compelled to abandon the enterprize, and retire, May 12th, 1706. By the treaty of Utrecht, in 1713, the troops of the emperor evacuated Catalonia, but the inhabitants of Barcelona perſiſted in their revolt, and would not acknowledge Philip for their king; they ſuffered a blockade for a year, which was followed by a terrible bombardment, and in fine, after a ſiege of 62 days, from the opening of the trenches by the duke of Berwick, the town was taken by aſſault the 11th of September, 1714. By the moderation of the conqueror, the town was ſaved from pillage, but the privileges of the inhabitants were taken away; theſe however have ſince been re-eſtabliſhed; but a citadel was erected in 1715, to keep them in awe. Barcelona contains ſeveral fine edifices; that called the Terſana, or the arſenal, is of vaſt extent ; a prodigious gallery, containing 28 forges, has been erected in it within a few years. The cathedral, the church of Notre Dame, the exchange, biſhop's palace, the palace of the governor, of the inquiſition, &c. are all magnificent. About 20 years ago, a very large cannon foundery was eſtabliſhed in this city, under the care of Mr. Maritz, a Swiſs. Barcelona carries on an extenſive trade in its own fruits and manufactures of glaſs, ſwords, knives, &c. and foreign merchandize. The harbour is ſpacious, commodious, and always full of veſſels, but it is ſometimes dangerous : it daily fills up, and requires continual care, and an immenſe expence to keep the entrance open : the ſea viſibly retires, and if the clearing of the harbour were neglected for a few years, Barcelona would ſoon be at a diſtance from the ſhore. It is defended on one ſide from the winds by Montjoui, which runs into the ſea, in the form of a promontory, and on the other by a mole 300 paces in length. The port of Barcelona exports its ſilks, middling cloths, and cotonades, wines, brandies, and other productions, and if we wiſh to judge of the part the Catalonians take in this commerce, it muſt be obſerved, that in 1782, out of 628 veſſels which entered Barcelona, 317 belonged to Spain. It is true that ſilks from Lyons, ſtockings from Nimes, ſeveral kinds of ſtuffs and cottons, notwithſtanding the prohibition, and particularly dried cod, an article for which Spain pays annually to the Engliſh three millions of piaſtres, paſs into Catalonia by the ſame port. Barcelona was erected into a county by Charlemagne, and became an independent ſovereignty in the year 873 or 884. The king of Spain is called the count of Barcelona. The dioceſe contains 213 pariſhes, beſides 8 in the city : Barcelona is ſituated 13 leagues ENE. Taragona, and 92 ENE. Madrid. Long. 18. 45. E. Peak of Teneriffe. Lat. 41. 23. N.

BARFLEUR, a ſea-port town of France, in the department of the Channel. It had formerly a good harbour, a conſiderable trade, and was the beſt port on the coaſt of Normandy, but through neglect the harbour is choaked with ſand, and the trade in conſequence decayed : 4½ leagues E. Cherburg.—In the year 1035, William Duke of Normandy fitted out his fleet here, with which he made his deſcent on England : and his ſucceſſors uſually ſailed to, and took their departure from it. In the year 1120, Henry I. ſet ſail from this port, and was by a fair wind ſoon out of ſight of land, but his ſon, prince William, who with ſeveral young noblemen embarked in another veſſel, were detained by ſome accident ; during which interval his ſailors, as well as their captain Fitz-Stephen, having employed themſelves in drinking, became ſo intoxicated, that they ran the ſhip upon a rock, where it was immediately daſhed to pieces. William was put into the long boat, when hearing the cries of his natural ſiſter, the counteſs of Perche, he ordered the ſeamen to row back, in hopes of ſaving her, but by the numbers that crowded in from the wreck, the boat ſunk, and the prince with all his retinue periſhed. Above 140 young noblemen, of the principal families of England and Normandy, were loſt on this occaſion. The only perſon on board who eſcaped, was a butcher of Rouen, who clung to the maſt, and was taken up next morning by fiſhermen. In the year 1346, it was taken and pillaged by Edward III. king of England, and the harbour deſtroyed.

BASSING, a town of France, in the department of the Meurte, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Dieuze: 1½ league NE. Dieuze.

BASSORA, or Baſrah, a city of Aſia, in the Arabian Irak, ſituated on a navigable canal, weſt of the Euphrates, built in the year 656, by order of Omar, the ſecond caliph, to hinder the commerce of the Perſians: this canal is navigable for veſſels of 50 tons to the Euphrates, and thence to the Gulf of Perſia, from which it lies about 15 leagues north-weſt. It is a place of very conſiderable trade, veſſels from Europe and Aſia are always found in the port. The troubles of Perſia were of conſiderable advantage to the trade of Baſſora. Merchants of Arabia, Turkey, Armenia, Greece, Jews, and Indians reſide there, the Engliſh and Dutch have their conſuls, and their ſhips come from India loaded with merchandize: thoſe from Bengal, which arrive from the month of March to June, bring white linens, ſilk, muſlins, baſtard-ſaffron, ſandal and other woods, benzoin, varniſh, rice, lead, European tin and iron. From the coaſt of Coromandel they bring thicker cloths, white or blue, with which the Arabians clothe themſelves. From the coaſt of Malabar they bring cardamom ſeeds, pepper, &c. From Surat all kinds of gold and ſilver ſtuffs, turbans, blue cloths, indigo, and ſteel, of which the Perſians are the chief purchaſers, to make their ſabres. The principal merchandizes of the Dutch are ſpices and coffee from Java. The veſſels which arrive from Surat belong chiefly to Muſſulmen merchants, but the Europeans are the moſt numerous. Some Arabians bring ſlaves, others bring pearls. The neighbouring countries furniſh alſo merchandize for exchange; the moſt conſiderable of which are the ancient copper of Perſia, grain, when the exportation is allowed, dates, wine, and dry fruits of Perſia, &c. Baſſora rather belongs to the Arabs than the Turks, and the language of the former is chiefly ſpoken. The prince pays but little reſpect to the Ottoman court. As to religion, beſides Mahometans, there are Syrian Jacobites and Neſtorians; and monks from Europe; there are beſides, ſome modern Sabeans, whom they call diſciples of John. The number of inhabitants is computed to be 50,000; the town is of very great extent, and ſurrounded by a wall of clay, ſaid to be 12 miles in circumference: 210 miles SW. Iſpahan, and 600 SE. Aleppo. Long. 44. 30. E. Greenwich. Lat. 29. 30. N.

BASSOUES, a town of France, in the department of the Gers, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Mirande: 5 leagues WSW. Auch.

BASTA, a town of Egypt: 40 miles NE. Cairo, and 31 SSE. Manſora.

BASTAN, a town of Aſiatic Turkey, in the province of Natolia: 30 miles SW. Amaſiah.

BASTAVOE, a bay on the eaſt ſide of Yell, one of the Shetland iſlands.

BASTELLICA, a town of the iſland of Corſica: 5 leagues ENE. Ajaccio.

BASTIA, a city and ſea-port of Corſica, and capital of the iſland, commanded by a lofty mountain, about 400 fathom in length, and 100 in width, in the centre of which the ſea forms a ſmall bay, defended by a mole. It is divided into two parts, called Terra Nuova, and Terra Vecchia, in the former of which is a citadel, ſurrounded with fortifications. The harbour is good, but ſmall, and fit only for ſmall veſſels, the commerce is inconſiderable. In the year 1745, it received conſiderable damage from a bombardment by the Engliſh. In the year 1748, it was beſieged by the Auſtrians, but without ſucceſs. In the year 1794, lord Hood, after the ſurrender of Morbello and St. Fiorenza, proceeded to Baſtia, where he arrived the 10th of May. The number of perſons capable of bearing arms in Baſtia originally amounted to no more than 3000 men. The fortifications were not in the beſt ſtate, and the garriſon but indifferently provided: yet they made a moſt gallant defence againſt the united efforts of the Britiſh fleet and army, joined by a conſiderable corps of Corſicans, which Paoli had collected and diſpatched thither; and reſiſted till the 19th of May, when lord Hood, "in conſideration of the very gallant defence made by the garriſon of Baſtia, and from principles of humanity," offered honourable terms to the commandant, Gentili; which, in the ſituation of the garriſon, it would have been deſperation to reject. In conſequence of this negotiation, on the 24th, they marched out with the honours of war, and Baſtia was taken poſſeſſion of by the Engliſh. The loſs of the French has not been aſcertained on this occaſion; that of the Engliſh was not conſiderable. The number of inhabitants is ſuppoſed to be about 6000. Long. 27. 12. E. Ferro. Lat. 42. 35. N.

BASTIA, a ſea-port town of Iſtria, in the Adriatic: 8 miles SSE. Umago. Long. 38. E. Ferro. Lat. 39. 41. N.

BASTOGNE, a city of the Netherlands, in the duchy of Luxemburg, near the foreſt of Ardennes; it is ſo populous, ſo well built, and has ſo much trade, that it is not unfrequently called Paris in Ardennes. This city was in poſſeſſion of the French from 1684 to 1698, when, by the peace of Ryſwick, it was reſtored with its juriſdiction to Spain, from whom it deſcended to the houſe of Auſtria. The juriſdiction, which is part of the ancient comté of Ardennes, comprehends 145 villages and hamlets: 22 miles NW. Luxemburg, and 35 S. Liege. Long. 23. 11. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 6. N.

BASZEU, a river of European Turkey, which runs into the Pruth, near Stephanowze, in Moldavia.

BATACOLA, a ſea-port town of India, on the coaſt of Malabar, where the Engliſh had once a ſettlement, but they were all maſſacred by the natives, in the year 1670: 20 miles N. Barcelor.

BATAHANO, a town of the iſland of Cuba, on the weſtern coaſt, oppoſite the iſland of Pines.

BATAN, a town of Aſiatic Turkey, in the province of Natolia: 20 miles S. Kutaia.

BATAVIA, a ſea-port town on the north coaſt of the iſland of Java, in the kingdom of Jacatra, ſituated in a low and marſhy plain, at the union of ſome ſmall rivers, which deſcend from mountains, and render the internal navigation eaſy: in moſt of the ſtreets are canals filled with almoſt ſtagnant water; ſome of which canals extend into the country. The city occupies a great ſpace, becauſe the houſes are large, convenient, and airy; the ſtreets are very wide and ſtraight. The borders of the canals are ſhaded with large trees, which ſtop the exhalations of the marſhy land, hinder a free circulation of air, and render it unwholeſome; this unwholeſomeneſs is much increaſed by the cuſtom of depoſiting the black and putrid mud on the ſides of the canal to dry. The public buildings are for the moſt part without elegance; the church of the Croſs is large and handſome: the town-houſe is well ſituated; the hoſpital is convenient and large. It is ſurrounded with a rampart of ſtones or bricks, at the foot of which runs a rapid river. At the end of the town is a caſtle, with lofty and thick walls, well furniſhed with artillery, which commands the place of landing, and contains large apartments, magazines, workſhops, &c. At ſome diſtance from the town are forts and redoubts, to command the canals and the roads; but the chief defence is from its marſhy ſituation. The harbour is the moſt beautiful in India, it is large, and the bottom ſecure. Round the harbour and in the bay are ſeveral iſlands, among which are Edam, whither they ſend criminals to hard labour; it is about 1½ league in circumference: Purmerent, in which is an hoſpital: Kuyper, or Cooper, in which are magazines of rice and other merchandize: Onruſt, this iſland is 2 leagues from the town, and well fortified; here is a timber yard, where three or four hundred carpenters are kept conſtantly employed, with magazines of ſtores to furniſh veſſels with whatever they may want. Batavia is ſaid to contain within the walls 1242 Dutch houſes and 200 Chineſe, and nearly as many in the ſuburbs; the population is ſuppoſed to be 60,000 ſouls, of which 17,000 are Europeans, or the deſcendants of Europeans. The heat is moderated during the day by a wind which blows from the ſea, and during the night the air is cooled by winds blowing from the land. The environs are ſpread with country houſes and large gardens, covered with lofty trees, and interſected with rivers and canals; but in the midſt of cultivated lands are found marſhes, bogs, and brackiſh waters, which produce fevers and epidemic diſorders; every countenance announces debility and langour: ſome houſes indeed are built in ſituations more elevated, and where the air is more pure, but theſe are very rare. For the ſpace of ten or twelve leagues the land is a perfect flat; beyond this are two hills, where men ſeem to poſſeſs ſtrength and colour, where the diſeaſed readily find health, and the rich enjoy a charming retreat. This ſoil, ſo unfriendly to man, is the beſt for vegetation, and produces great quantities of rice, Indian corn, millet, potatoes, indigo, &c.; vaſt plantations of the ſugar-cane grow almoſt without culture, and produce a greater quantity of that vegetable ſalt than thoſe of the American iſlands. In the year 1619, Batavia was only a village, palliſadoed round with bamboo canes; in a flat country, marſhy, and ſubject to the inundations of a river running throught it. At this time the Dutch made a ſettlement here, who demoliſhed the old, and built the new town, which they called Batavia; they cut canals and drains, to carry off the water upon any land floods. The bay has ſeventeen or eighteen iſlands, which defend the harbour, capable of containing 1000 veſſels from the violence of the winds and waves; two large piers run out half a mile into the ſea, between which 100 ſlaves are conſtantly employed in taking out the mud or ſoil, waſhed out of the town, without which the mouth of the river would ſoon be choaked up: a boom croſſes it below the town, which is ſhut up every night, and well guarded by a detachment from the main-guard. Here all veſſels pay toll. A ſea gale riſes every morning at ten, to bring veſſels into the bar, and a land one at ten at night, to carry them out, one from the north, the other from the ſouth. It is the reſidence of the governor-general of the Indies, appointed by the States of Holland every three years. Long. 106. 50. E. Greenwich. Lat. 6. 10. N.

BATAVIAN REPUBLIC, the name adopted by Holland and the other United States, ſince the French Revolution.

BATH, a city of England, in the county of Somerſet, is ſituated in a deep narrow valley, bounded on the north, ſouth, and ſouth-weſt by lofty hills, forming a very pleaſant natural amphitheatre, and affording the city a double advantage, a barrier againſt the winds, and fountains of the pureſt waters. Theſe hills abound with white free-ſtone, of which the houſes are built. On the north-weſt ſide the valley widens, divided into rich meadows, watered by the river Avon. Various have been the appellations of this celebrated town. The Britons called it Caer Palladwr, Caer Badon, Caer Bladin, &c. The Romans gave it the name of Aquæ Solis, Fontes Calidi, Thermæ, Badonia, Bathonia, &c. Theſe waters are ſaid, from the lateſt experiments, to contain a ſmall portion of common ſalt, a larger proportion of ſelenites, a portion of fixable air, and ſome ſulphureous gas, or inflammable air, together with a ſlight chalybeate impregnation. Theſe are all that chemiſtry has as yet diſcovered: but from the inadequacy of theſe impregnations to the effects produced, it is probable that ſome latent cauſe is concerned of too ſubtle a nature to be ſubjected to ſuch analyſis, or perhaps to be the object of our ſenſes, or even of our comprehenſion. There are three principal ſprings, or baths, the King's-Bath, the Hot-Bath, and the Croſs-Bath. The Queen's-Bath is merely an expanſion of the waters of the King's-Bath. The heat of the King's-Bath is 116 degrees on Fahrenheit's thermometer, of the Hot-Bath 117, and of the Croſs-Bath 111. The diſorders particularly benefited by the Bath waters are obſtructions of the viſcera, palſies, gout, rheumatiſm, hyſteric colic, the colic of Poitiers, jaundice, white ſwellings, leproſy, hyſteric and hypochondriacal complaints, and ſpaſmodic diſeaſes, as the St. Vitus's dance, &c. The circumſtances which forbid the uſe of the Bath waters, are all caſes with fever, till the fever be removed, pain in the breaſt, with cough, a difficulty of breathing, all caſes in which internal ſuppuration or ſchirrhus has taken place; all caſes of hæmorrhages and plethora. The diſcovery of theſe waters is, by ancient hiſtorians, attributed to Bladud, ſon of Lud-Hudibras, who was king of this county 890 years before the birth of Chriſt; but the antiquity of the city and the baths themſelves we are not to refer to any higher period than the arrival of the Romans, a people peculiarly happy in converting the gifts of nature to the propereſt uſes, and in ſupplying her deficiencies by admirable works of art. It was in the year of our Lord 44, and in the reign of the Emperor Claudius, that the Roman forces, under the conduct of Flavius Veſpaſian, after having reduced all the Belgic colonies and the weſtern parts of Britain under the ſubjection of the Roman empire, ſat down in this territory, to which they had probably been directed by the native Belgæ. The report of ſuch genial waters as flowed with ſpontaneous heat from the boſom of the earth, in a rude and barbarous country, was a ſufficient inducement to a people who had ſo lately left the luxuries of Italy, where every art was employed in erecting the moſt ſuperb baths and ſudatories, and in fabricating, with immenſe labour and expence, that very article of indulgence, which nature in this ſpot furniſhed without the ſmalleſt trouble to their hands. Such an extraordinary and unexpected bounty they could not fail aſcribing to that orb, which imparts heat and vigour to the univerſe, and they at once beſtowed upon the waters the appellation of Aquæ Solis, or the Waters of the Sun. Here they ſtationed the firſt detachment of the ſecond legion, building proper habitations for the officers, and the military in general; and at length by the arrival of other legions, the place grew into a city, endowed with Roman liberties, and governed by Roman laws. Walls, gates, and temples, were erected, and a little Rome began to adorn a dreary inhoſpitable wild. In the reign of Hadrian, about A. D. 118, that ſame detachment of the ſecond legion, ſtill remaining here, was joined by a diviſion of the ſixth, and in that of Severus, a part of the twentieth legion, removed from Devana, or Cheſter, had their ſtation in Aquæ Solis, which was then become the moſt capital city in Roman Britain, and the principal, if not the only place in this part of the iſland for preparing the legionary arms and enſigns. The old Roman city was built in the form of a pentagon, the area whereof was 1200 feet in length, and the greateſt breadth about 1150. It was ſurrounded by a ſtrong wall, compoſed of layers of ſtone, brick, and terras, nine feet in thickneſs, and twenty feet in height, this wall was flanked by circular towers at each angle, and had four gateways, anſwering nearly to the four cardinal points of the compaſs, from which in ſubſequent times, the principal ſtreets had their denominations. During the reign of the Emperor Theodoſius, Chryſanthus, being then Governor in Britain, the Roman legions began to leave this place, now increaſed into a great and populous city, inhabited by families unconnected with military concerns, and practiſing the arts of civilization and peace. At length about the year 444, the Roman army totally withdrew from the place, and left it to the poſſeſſion of the Britons, who by their intercourſe and intermarriages with the Romans, had before conſtituted a conſiderable part of its inhabitants. The Saxons, who had been invited into Britain, and diſperſed themſelves into various parts thereof, by ſmall degrees erected themſelves into ſeveral petty ſtates, or monarchies. Bath, with a few other conſiderable cities in the weſtern parts of the iſland, ſtill remained in the poſſeſſion of the Britons, till the year 577, when a large army of the Saxons, under the command of Ceaulin and Cuthwin, advanced towards its walls. They were met by three Britiſh kings of the names of Conmail, Condidin, and Farinmail, who, giving them battle, fell, and Bath ſoon after was obliged, for the firſt time, to yield to the Saxon arms. This period afforded a new name, and a different proſpect to this memorable city, becoming part of the dominions of the Weſt-Saxons, under which it flouriſhed for near 200 years; and perhaps it is owing to this people, that we know ſo little or ſo much of the Roman ſtate of Bath. On the foundation of thoſe walls, which they themſelves had induſtriouſly deſtroyed, freſh bulwarks were erected with the old materials, and with others brought from the ruins of temples, mauſoleums, and triumphal arches, and therein was inſerted a variety of ſculptures, which they had thrown down from their ruined buildings. The interior parts of the city were decorated in a new taſte, and filled with adventitious ſtructures. Oſric, king of the Northumbrian ſtates, with the conſent of Kentwine, that once relentleſs chacer of the Britiſh powers, erected, in the year 676, a houſe of nuns, to the honour of God, and St. Peter the apoſtle. The Daniſh invaſions interrupted the tranquillity of the city, and the progreſs of its improvements. At length it aſſumed new ſplendour under the Auguſtan reign of Edgar, who, in the year 973, was conſecrated and crowned with great ſolemnity in the church of St. Peter, in the preſence of Oſwald, archbiſhop of York, and the ſeveral other prelates of England. This monarch endowed the city with divers valuable privileges, erecting it into a free borough, granting it a market, and the liberty of coinage, and exempting it from toll, tribute and taxes; the memory of which benefactions the inhabitants preſerved for many ages in anniverſary games and feſtive pageantries. At the time of the invaſion of this country by the Normans, there were within the walls of Bath 178 burgeſſes, 64 of whom were tenants to the king, 90 to the barons and great men, and 24 to the church of St. Peter. Such was the ſtate of Bath in the time of William the Conqueror; but in the ſucceeding reign of Rufus it underwent a revolution, which proved the ſubject of much controverſy, and unſeemly confuſion, to the eccleſiaſtical polity of the country. From the time of the Conqueſt, foreigners had been invited and encouraged to ſettle within the precincts of this city. Among the reſt was John de Villula, a native of Tours, in the province of Orleanois, in France, who for ſeveral years practiſed phyſic in this reſort of Valetudinarians, and accumulated by his practice a prodigious fortune; by virtue hereof, and by his intereſt with the monks eſtabliſhed in the ancient foundation of king Offa, he at length procured the biſhopric of Wells, to which he, by money advanced to the king, annexed the abby of Bath, vacant by the death of biſhop Giſo, another French emigrant. At the inſtance of biſhop Burnel, in the reign of Edward I. this city firſt ſent repreſentatives to parliament. The government of the city was originally veſted in a ſheriff; the firſt that appears to have borne this office was Ælfred, who is ſaid to have been a great benefactor to the city, and died A. D. 907. It afterwards had a provoſt, or bailiff. Its firſt charters were confirmed by king Edward III. Richard II. Henry V. and Henry VI. Queen Elizabeth, in the thirty-ſecond year of her reign, granted the city a new charter, declaring it to be a ſole city of itſelf, and the citizens to be a body corporate and politic, by the name of mayor, aldermen, and citizens of the city of Bath. The commerce of Bath, abſtracted from the expenditures of faſhionable company reſorting to the city, is now altogether inconſiderable; nor is there any manufacture which deſerves particular notice. Formerly, however, it was almoſt in a manner maintained by clothing. Leland, who viſited this place in the reign of Henry VIII. informs us, that a little before his time, there were three capital clothiers of the names of Style, Kent, and Chapman, by whom the town of Bath then flouriſhed; and it is aſſerted, that at the time of the Reſtoration there were no leſs than ſixty broad looms employed in the ſingle pariſh of St. Michael. The river Avon was made navigable by an act of parliament, 10 Anne, and the firſt barge laden with deals, pig-lead, and meal, was brought up to the city, Dec. 15, 1727. The number of barges employed upon this river, to and from Briſtol, is nine, and their burden on an average thirty tons each. This city, like that of Rome, from a very ſmall and mean beginning, is now become ſo large in bulk, and withal, ſo elegant in its buildings, and ſo reſpectable in its inhabitants and its viſitors, as to be the pride of England, and the admiration of foreigners. The old city walls are now built over, and its priſtine ſtate almoſt wholly obliterated by modern improvements. The moſt ſuperb edifices, raiſed by the moſt ſkilful architects, riſe in every quarter, and compoſe one of the moſt beautiful cities in the world. In the earlier part of the civil wars, Bath was garriſoned for the ſervice of King Charles I. and the ſum of 7000 pounds was expended on its fortifications. Notwithſtanding which, upon the approach of a ſmall party of dragoons to the city walls, and the appearance of another upon the Beechen-cliff, near the city of Bath, the gates were thrown open, and the city ſurrendered to the enemy. Hereupon it became one of the principal poſts of the parliament forces in this county, and here Sir William Waller lay for a conſiderable time with his whole army, making ſallies into the country, and inviting together all the diſaffected from the neighbouring clothing towns and villages. But after the battle of Roundway-down, July 13, 1643, in which Sir William Waller was defeated, and the withdrawing of the garriſon hence to the reinforcement of Briſtol, the king's troops retook poſſeſſion of the city. In the year 1715, a deſign was ſet on foot for a general hoſpital, but not carried into effect till the year 1738, when freſh contributions were made, a ſpacious and very commodious edifice erected, and an act of parliament procured for incorporating the directors of the charity by the name of The Preſident and Governors of the General Hoſpital or Infirmary at Bath. In 1742, the houſe was opened for the reception of the ſick poor from every part of Great Britain and Ireland, thoſe of Bath only excepted, in regard they always have a readier and leſs expenſive acceſs to the benefits of the water. There are three pariſh churches in Bath, and ſeveral chapels of the eſtabliſhed form: beſides places of worſhip for Roman Catholics, Preſbyterians, Moravians, Unitarians, and Quakers: 19 miles NE. BATTEL, a town of England, in the county of Suſſex; built near the place where the deciſive battle was fought between Harold and William duke of Normandy, on the 14th of October, 1066. The conqueror afterwards built an abby on the ſpot, dedicated to St. Martin, with conſiderable privileges and endowments, to pray for the ſouls of the ſlain; and the remains, yet viſible, bear marks of its ancient grandeur: the abby was called Battel-abby, and very ſoon after people began to build near, and a town gradually grew, which was alſo called Battel. This is given as the origin of the place. The town conſiſts of one good ſtreet; the principal manufacture is gun-powder, of conſiderable eſtimation among ſportſmen. On the ſecond Tueſday in every month there is a market for cattle, corn, &c. and a market weekly on Thurſdays, for proviſions, &c.: 6 miles N. Haſtings, and 57 S. London.

BAVANY, a river of Hindooſtan, which runs into the Cauvery: 7 miles N. Erroad, in Coimbetore.

BAVARIA, a circle of Germany, is bounded on the north by Franconia and Bohemia, on the eaſt and ſouth by the circle of Auſtria, and on the weſt by Swabia, and contains about 2830 ſquare leagues. It receives its name from the duchy of Bavaria, which forms the greater part. It is compoſed of twenty ſtates, divided into two benches, the one eccleſiaſtical, and the other ſecular. Theſe ſtates are convoked by the duke of Bavaria, and the archbiſhop of Saltzburg, who direct alternately; the aſſemblies are held generally at Ratiſbon or Waſſerburg, and they vote in the following order: the archbiſhop of Saltzburg, duke of Bavaria, biſhop of Freyſing, duke of Neuburg and Sulzbach, biſhop of Ratiſbon, landgrave of Leuchtenberg, biſhop of Paſſau, comte Sternſtein, provoſt of Berchtholdſgaden, comte of Haag, abbot of St. Emeran, comte of Ortenburg, abbot of Nieder-Munſter, lord of Ehrerfels, abbot of Ober-Munſter, lord of Sulzburg and Pyrbaum, lord of Hohen-Waldek, lord of Breteneck and town of Ratiſbon. When the army of the empire is 40,000, this circle is engaged to furniſh 800 horſemen, and 1494 foot as its contingent.

BAVARIA, the electorate or duchy, comprehends the greater part of the circle, and has nearly the ſame bounds, 60 leagues long, and 40 broad, and is divided into Upper and Lower Bavaria, and Upper Palatinate. Towards the ſouth the country is mountainous, interſperſed with foreſts, lakes, and moraſſes, with paſture grounds, but few corn fields, towards the north are found large and fertile plains, which produce plenty of corn; there are likewiſe many ſalt works, medicinal ſprings and baths, mines of copper, ſilver, and lead, quarries of excellent marble, plenty of game, fiſh, and cattle. The principal rivers are the Danube, Larch, Inn, Altmuhl, Nab, and Iſer; they count 16 lakes of a larger ſize, and 160 ſmaller; 275 rivers, great and ſmall; 360 foreſts; 720 mountains, and a great number of fiſh ponds. They reckon 48 cities; 123 towns; 1200 villages; 1000 chateaus, or noblemens' ſeats; 86 convents; 1500 pariſhes; 28,709 churches; and about four millions of ſouls. The revenues of the elector amount to about five or ſix millions of imperial crowns; the military forces amount to about 12,000 in time of peace, and rather more than double in time of war. The ſtates of Bavaria are compoſed of prelates, nobles, cities, and towns, which are aſſembled by the deputies at Munich; but this ſeldom happens: the ſtates of the Upper Palatinate have held no diet ſince the year 1628. The inhabitants of the Upper and Lower Bavaria are the moſt zealous Catholics in Europe. There are however ſome Proteſtants in the Upper Palatinate. The principal manufactures are coarſe cloth, ſtuffs of woollen, cotton, and ſilk ſtockings, velvet, carpets, clocks, &c. The principal exports are wheat, cattle, wood, ſalt, and iron; which employ and feed the inhabitants, and enrich the prince. The elector holds the fifth place in the electorate college, and the ſecond among the ſecular electors; he has a ſeat and the firſt vote among the college of princes. His aſſeſſment in the matricula of the empire amounts to 60 horſe, and 277 foot, or 1828 florins for the Roman month. To the chamber of Wetzlar he is rated at 811 rix-dollars, and 58 kreutzers.

BAVARIA (Upper), is divided into two governments, or regencies, viz. that of Munich, and Burkhauſen. The principal towns of the former are Munich, Pfaffenhauſen, Abenſperg, Ingolſtadt, Donawert, Friedberg, Wilhem, and Waſſerburg; of the latter, Burkhauſen, Branau, and Scherding.

BAVARIA (Lower), is likewiſe divided into two governments, viz. that of Landſhuit, the principal towns of which are Landſhuit, Aerding, Dingelfing, Landau, Vilſhofen, Oſterhoſen, and Moſburg; and the government of Straubing, the principal places of which are Straubing, Cham, Kelheim, Dietfurt, Stadt-am-Hof, and Deckendorf.

BEDFORD, a town of England, and capital of the county of Bedford, to which it gives name, ſituated on the Ouſe : it contains 5 churches, 3 on the north, and 2 on the ſouth ſide of the river ; it is a place of conſiderable trade, which is much aſſiſted by the river, navigable to Lynn, and is the only market town of the county, on the north ſide of the Ouſe ; the ſoil about is fertile, particularly in excellent wheat. The corporation conſiſts of a mayor, recorder, two bailiffs, twelve aldermen, &c. The aſſizes were always held here, except in the year 1684, when they were removed to Ampthil, by the intereſt of the earl of Ayleſbury, its recorder. This place was famous for a victory, gained in the year 572, by Cuthwulf, the Saxon king, over the Britons ; and for the interment of the great king Offa, who choſe to have his bones laid in a ſmall chapel, near the river Ouſe, which, happening to overflow, carried them quite away. The Danes once deſtroyed this town ; but Edward the Elder repaired it, and united the town on the ſouth ſide of the river, called Mikeſgate, to Bedford, on the north ſide of it ; ſince which they have both gone by this name. After the conqueſt, Pagan de Beauchamp, the third baron of Bedford, built a caſtle here, encompaſſed with a mighty rampart of earth, and a high wall, the whole ſo ſtrong that king Stephen, who beſieged and took it in his war with the empreſs Maud, was glad to grant the garriſon honourable terms. In the barons' wars, it was again beſieged, and for want of relief, taken by King John's forces, under Fulco de Brent, to whom the king gave it for a reward ; but for his ſubſequent behaviour, he took it from him, and cauſed it to be demoliſhed, though it was not quite level till the reign of Henry III. The place firſt gave title of Duke to the victorious prince John Plantagenet, regent of France, during the minority of his nephew, Henry VI. as it did in the reign of Edward IV. firſt to John Nevil, marquis of Montacute, and then to the king's third ſon, George Plantagenet ; but he dying an infant, the title lay vacant till Henry VII. created, his uncle, Jaſper Tudor, duke of Bedford, who alſo died without iſſue ; and thus far it is very remarkable, that the title was enjoyed by the firſt poſſeſſor only of each family. But king Edward VI. making John Lord Ruſſel, earl of Bedford, the dignity has ever ſince been in that illuſtrious houſe, with an advancement of it to the title of duke, by King William III. As the corporation is very ancient, it has ſent repreſentatives to Parliament from the earlieſt times to the preſent. It has two markets weekly, viz. one on Monday, chiefly for cattle, held in the ſouth part of the town ; the other on Saturday, for corn and proviſions, held in the north part of the town : 22 miles SE. The principal rivers are the Ouſe, and the Ivel ; the principal towns are Bedford, Ampthill, Biggleſwade, Dunſtable, Potton, Luton, Leighton-Buzzard, Shefford, Wooburn, and Taddington. The face of the country is in general varied with ſmall hills and dales, with few extenſive levels. Towards the ſouth the land is hilly and chalky ; on the weſt ſide for the moſt part flat and ſandy ; the other parts are a deep ſoil and clay. The principal productions of Bedfordſhire, are corn and butter. In ſome parts they cultivate woad for dyers ; and near Wooburn, they dig fullers-earth. The principal manufactures are lace-making, hats, baſkets, and other articles made of ſtraw. Bedfordſhire is divided into nine hundreds, and contains 116 pariſhes, 67,350 inhabitants, and 260,000 acres. BELGARD, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and chief place of a circle to which it gives name, in the duchy of Pomerania, ſituated on the Perſante, and noted for its market for horſes. It is a very ancient town, but we find no certain account of it till the eleventh century. It was heretofore very conſiderable, both for number and valour of inhabitants, but has been a great ſufferer by wars and conflagrations. In 1506, it was burnt to the ground, the houſes were ſoon rebuilt, but not with their former grandeur, and no ſooner was the tower of the re-edified church up, than it was thrown down by lightning. The like fate happened in 1562 and 1564: 38 miles NW. New Stettin, and 40 E. Cammin.

BELGIUM, a name given by the French to the Netherlands ſince the revolution, and formally decreed to be a part of France, in the month of September, 1795, and with the biſhopric of Liege, divided into nine departments, the capitals of which are Antwerp, Bruges, Bruſſels, Ghent, Liege, Luxemburg, Maeſtricht, Mons, and Namur.

BELGRADE, a ſtrong town of European Turkey, in Servia, and reſidence of a ſangiac, ſituated on the ſide of a hill, at the conflux of the Save and the Danube. This city is large, and has been very beautiful and well fortified, being defended by one of the ſtrongeſt caſtles in Europe. In the year 1436, the Sultan Amurath, grandſon to the famous Bajazet, took the opportunity of ſome civil diſſenſions in Hungary, to invade that kingdom, and with a numerous army laid ſiege to Belgrade; but the city was ſecured with a garriſon of near 10,000 men, who made a vigorous defence, and compelled the Turks to retire. In the year 1521, the Sultan Solyman, ſurnamed the magnificent, laid ſiege to Belgrade, which made but weak reſiſtance; the garriſon ſurrendered priſoners of war on the 29th Auguſt. In the year 1688, the Imperial army commanded by Maximilian Emanuel, elector of Bavaria, laid ſiege to Belgrade on the 11th of Auguſt, in which was a Turkiſh garriſon of 12,000 men, and a baſhaw governor. The elector was wounded in the cheek by an arrow. The ſame day he ſent a captain, with a Greek interpreter, to ſummon the governor to ſurrender, who was ſo enraged, that he impriſoned the former, and hanged the latter. This exaſperated the elector, he renewed the attack with redoubled vigour, and having made ſeveral breaches was determined to ſtorm the town; and with a reſolution that ſeemed inſpired more by frenzy than courage, his ſoldiers mounted the breaches, from whence they were twice beaten, but being timely ſupported, they made another vigorous effort, when an obſtinate engagement enſued, which at length terminated in favour of the Imperialiſts, who entered the town pell-mell, and put all they met to the ſword, without even ſparing the women or little children. The Imperialiſts loſt in this ſiege and ſtorm, at leaſt 500 men, among whom was the brave general Schaffenberg, and had about 250 wounded. The conſequence of this conqueſt was no more than a temporary poſſeſſion: for Louis XIV. making war againſt the emperor, the elector was recalled out of Hungary, to command on the Rhine; therefore the inroad he had made into the Turkiſh dominions, which had coſt ſo much blood and treaſure, by a turn in politics effected by Louis, was rendered of no utility, ſince no advantages could be reaped from it. Prince Louis, of Baden, commanded in Hungary during the elector's abſence; but his army was too ſmall to oppoſe the progreſs which the Ottoman troops were now every where making; on the firſt of October, 1690, they inveſted Belgrade with a determined reſolution to retake it. The garriſon conſiſted of 6000 German veterans, commanded by count d'Aſpremont, well provided with all ſorts of ammunition and proviſions. But the breaches which the elector had made were not fully repaired, ſo that they were forced to defend them with a double rank of palliſadoes; an accident happened which blaſted all the hopes of the beſieged, a bomb from the Turks unhappily fell upon the great tower, where the magazine of powder lay; the whole was blown up, and with it above 1200 of the garriſon, and many of the reſt were wounded. The exploſion was felt like an earthquake; the walls of the city were thrown down, and ſeveral hundreds of the houſes laid in ruins; the town was inſtantly in a blaze, and many of the other magazines ſhared the ſame fate as the former. The Turks perceiving the effects their bombs had produced, and encouraged by the accident, were ſo wiſe as not to let ſlip ſo favourable an opportunity for making a general aſſault, therefore on the morning of the 8th of October, they advanced. The beſieged had ſome notion of their intention, were prepared to receive them, and a ſharp engagement began, in which the Turks were twice repulſed; but at length their numbers overpowered the beſieged, and obliged them to retire. The Turks, as the Imperialiſts had done, then entered the town, and put all to the ſword without diſtinction. Six thouſand men periſhed in two hours, nobly defending their governor, who, with the duke of Croy, count d'Archinto, and a few more officers, eſcaped through the Fiſher's-gate, and got over the Danube in ſaicks; but unfortunately one of the ſaicks which was overloaded ſunk, and all who were in it periſhed. The Turks are ſaid to have loſt in this ſiege near 15,000 men. The houſe of Auſtria could not reflect on the taking of Belgrade with indifference; this acquiſition was too important to neglect all attempts to regain it. The command of the army in Hungary was conferred on the duke of Croy, who had orders to lay ſiege to Belgrade. He appeared before it on the 13th of Auguſt, 1693, and by the 17th, made ſeveral formidable attacks, when the garriſon making a well concerted ſally, did him conſiderable miſchief, and obliged him to alter his diſpoſitions; notwithſtanding which he carried on his operations with great alacrity, and ſeemed wholly bent on taking this town, or periſhing in the attempt; but ſtill he was repulſed in his attacks, and when he was on the point of making a general aſſault, he received intelligence that the grand vizier, at the head of 80,000 men, was on his march to relieve the city. Upon which he thought proper to raiſe the ſiege, having loſt near 1000 men. By the treaty of Carlowitz, made in 1699, the Turks were left in poſſeſſion of Belgrade; but in 1715, pretending that the Venetians had infringed the articles of peace, they declared war, which was followed by the emperor's making a declaration of war againſt the Porte. In May 1717, prince Eugene marched at the head of a fine army, conſiſting of 100,000 men, to beſiege Belgrade. The Turks foreſaw his deſign, and therefore reinforced the garriſon to 30,000 men, and in other reſpects made it as they thought impregnable. Count Palfi was choſen to direct the ſiege, and his highneſs undertook to cover againſt any attempts of the Turkiſh army which lay in the neighbourhood, conſiſting of 150,000 men, commanded by the grand vizier. As prince Eugene and count Palfi were proſecuting this great and important undertaking, the Ottoman army began to feel compaſſion for the garriſon of Belgrade, and the grand Vizier, in order to ſhew he intended to relieve the place, approached the prince's camp with his whole army, and ſurrounding all the eminences, incloſed the Imperial forces between himſelf and the town. The Turks it was thought would have no occaſion to continue their fire, though it annoyed the prince greatly, and even obliged him to change his quarters, becauſe a contagious and mortal diſeaſe was fiercely fighting for them againſt the Imperialiſts. Prince Eugene, though he changed his quarters, kept upon the defenſive. At length an opportunity offered to charge the Ottoman army. The Turks were at firſt put into ſome diſorder, but they rallied, and Eugene in his turn was obliged to give way, owing to an inconvenience he could not immediately remedy, which was the ſeparation of his right wing from the centre; but he did not labour under it long, for ſeeing the Turks as faſt as poſſible filling the ſpace, he threw in his ſecond line of infantry, on which the enemy made ſeveral attacks, but with no ſucceſs: the line was impenetrable, and at length obliged the Turks to retreat. Victory now began to declare in his favour, which had been doubtful near four hours. At this juncture the right wing joined the army, and Eugene, with his whole front, reſolved to make an effort that ſhould decide the action. The whole army advanced and with great fury charged the retreating enemy, who, unable to ſtand the ſhock, fell into confuſion, and began to fly with precipitation; each ſoldier thinking only of ſaving his life. The Bavarian infantry fought with irreſiſtible fury; having ſpent their ammunition, they made a terrible carnage with their bayonets, which they puſhed with ſurpriſing ardour. His highneſs only purſued them a few miles beyond the eminence. Three thouſand were ſlain in the purſuit, and upwards of 10,000 on the field of battle; about 5000 were wounded, and near the ſame number made priſoners. The Imperialiſts had near 3000 killed, and about 4500 wounded, many of whom died ſoon after the battle. The next day prince Eugene ſummoned the baſha governor of Belgrade to ſurrender, threatening him with no quarter in caſe of his refuſal, on which the garriſon mutinied and obliged him to ſubmit, but much againſt his inclination, as the place was ſtill in a tolerable ſtate of defence, and, as he thought, tenable againſt all the efforts of the enemy. He obtained honourable terms; the garriſon was conducted to Nizza, and the prince entered the town after having beſieged it two months. A peace ſoon followed, but in 1738, the war broke out again: and in Auguſt 1739, the Ottoman army laid ſiege to Belgrade, but without ſucceſs. A peace was concluded the ſame year between the Auſtrians and Turks, by the mediation of the French; at whoſe requeſt, or rather direction, Belgrade was yielded to the Turks; but its fine fortifications were entirely demoliſhed, in purſuance of that treaty: 150 miles SSE. Buda, and 440 NW. Conſtantinople. Long. 37. 55. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 3. N.

BENCOOLEN, a ſea-port town of the iſland of Sumatra, on the ſouth-weſt coaſt. The Engliſh ſettled here in the year 1685, and in the year 1690 the Eaſt India company built a fort here, calling it Fort York. A convenient river on its north-weſt ſide brings the pepper out of the inland country; but there is great inconvenience in ſhipping it, by reaſon of a dangerous bar at the river's mouth. The place, which is almoſt two miles in compaſs, is known at ſea by a high ſlender mountain, which riſes in the country 20 miles beyond it, called the Sugar Loaf. In 1693, there happened a great mortality here, the governor and council all dying, one after another, in a ſhort time; the town ſtanding on a ſtinking moraſs, not agreeable to European conſtitutions. Wherefore, in 1719, a new fort was erecting in a more wholeſome part, and fitter for regular fortifications; but no ſooner did the walls begin to riſe than the natives roſe and ſet fire to the fort and moſt of the Engliſh buildings; the governor, garriſon, &c. thought beſt to embark for Batavia with all ſpeed, leaving ſome cheſts of money, artillery, arms, ammunition, &c. behind. But the natives a year after ſuffered the Engliſh to return, and encouraged them to poſſeſs again their new ſettlement, and proceed with building their Fort, which has the name of Marlborough Fort. The adjacent country is mountainous and woody, and there are many volcanoes in the iſland. The air is, indeed, full of malignant vapours, and the mountains always covered with thick clouds, which burſt in ſtorms of thunder, rain, &c. Tame buffaloes may be had here in plenty. Fiſh and poultry are ſcarce and dear. The ſoil is a fertile clay, producing high graſs; but near the ſea it is all moraſs. The natives build their dwellings on bamboo pillars. Long. 101. 5. E. Greenwich. Lat. 4. S.—It was taken by the French, in the year 1760, and Fort Marlborough deſtroyed: the fort has been ſince repaired.

BENFIOL, a mountain of Scotland, in the iſland of Coll.

BENGAL, a country of India, and moſt eaſterly of Hindooſtan, lying on each ſide of the Ganges, bounded on the north by the country of Bootan, on the eaſt by Aſſam and Meckley, on the ſouth by the ſea called the Bay of Bengal, and on the weſt by Bahar and Oriſſa, extending from 86. to 92. 30. E. longitude from Greenwich, and from 21. 30. to 26. 40. N. latitude. Bengal anciently formed a particular kingdom, and was ſometimes divided into ſeveral. It was united to the Mogul empire by Humaion, the third of the Tartar emperors, and afterwards by Eckar, one of his ſucceſſors, who divided it into 22 diſtricts. It is one of the richeſt countries of India: the climate is ſoft and temperate, and the land is wonderfully fertilized by abundant and periodical rains, by which the rivers, and eſpecially the Ganges, overflow the country, ſo that the inhabitants are compelled in many places during the inundation to make uſe of boats. Silk, cotton, rice, ſugar, and pepper, are the principal productions. The Engliſh began the commerce in the reign of Elizabeth; but had no regular eſtabliſhments. Afterwards the great Mogul granted them a diſtrict of land, on which they erected a factory, buildings, and magazines, from whence they ſent their merchandize, of which indigo was the chief, into the interior parts of Hindooſtan. They now ſend cloth and woollen ſtuffs, ſalt, copper, iron, lead, and other merchandizes which they bring from Europe, and purchaſe thence Indian linens, ſilk, ſtuffs, dimities, raw ſilk, drugs, ſaltpetre, diamonds, and other articles, which load the veſſels for the return. Among the articles of trade from one part of India to the other, one of the principal is opium. Cotton is brought from Bombay and Surat to Bengal, and pepper is carried from Bengal to China. The whole country belongs to the Engliſh Eaſt India company, and, together with the country of Bahar, produces a neat annual revenue of 1,290,000l. The Engliſh Eaſt India company exerciſe the ſovereignty, make laws, eſtabliſh tribunals, and govern the whole with an unlimited authority. Calcutta is the capital, the principal rivers are the Ganges, Burrampooter, Dummooda, Cooſy, Sanpou, or Teeſta, beſides many ſmaller ones.

BENGUELA, a country of Africa, bounded on the north by Angola, on the eaſt by the country of Jaga, Caſſangi, on the ſouth by Mataman, and on the weſt by the ſea, Cape Negro forms its ſouthern boundaries, from whence mountains run northward, in which are contained the ſprings of many rivers. The productions are nearly ſimilar to thoſe of Angola and Congo, one of the principal is Manioc: divers ſorts of palms are found; dates grow in great abundance: the vines naturally form allies and harbours; caſſia and tamarinds alſo flouriſh: and, from the humidity of the ſoil, they have two fruit ſeaſons in the year. The air of the country is exceedingly unwholeſome, and is ſaid even to affect its produce, and taint the waters of the rivers. Few Europeans care to venture on land, ſo that we know but little of the ſtate of the country. Moſt parts of the kingdom were once populous, but have ſuffered much by frequent wars; the chief towns are Old Benguela, St. Philip, or New Benguela, and Man-ki-kondo, and Kaſchil. Long. 30. to 35. BENIN, a country or kingdom of Africa, extending a courſe of 60 leagues on the borders of the Atlantic, how far it extends inland is not known; it is watered by a conſiderable number of ſtreams, ſome of which are conſiderable rivers. The ſoil near the ſea coaſt is low and marſhy, and the climate unhealthy, farther from the ſea the land is more elevated, and the air more pure. In ſome diſtricts ſprings are ſo rare, that officers are appointed to ſupply travellers with freſh water, who elſe muſt die with thirſt: but this commodity is not given, he who drinks muſt pay. In the rivers are a great number of crocodiles, ſea-horſes, and a ſpecies of torpedo, with many kinds of excellent fiſh. Among the animals are elephants in great numbers, tygers, leopards, ſtags, wild boars, apes, civet cats, mountain cats, horſes, hares, and hairy ſheep; there are a vaſt number of reptiles, ſerpents, and others. Of the birds, the principal are paroquets, pigeons, partridges, ſtorks, and oſtriches. The ſoil in general is fertile: oranges and lemons grow on the ſide of the roads; the pepper which grows here is ſmaller than that of the Indies, cotton grows on a tree which abounds every where; the water is moſt excellent. The negroes of Benin are ſaid to be kind and honeſt, yielding to mildneſs, but with great courage reſiſting injuſtice; attached to their ancient cuſtoms, they are complaiſant to ſtrangers, generous, ſenſible, yet reſerved and diffident: the children of both ſexes are circumciſed, and go naked till they are twelve years of age. Polygamy is common, and the king is ſaid to have 600 wives. Jealous of each other, they offer their wives to an European. The king exerciſes an abſolute authority over his ſubjects; three great officers, diſtinguiſhed by a ſtring of coral, continually attend upon him to conſult, inſtruct, or decide in his name. The king names his ſucceſſor among his ſons, who is not publicly announced till after the death of his father. A regency is appointed, which then takes the adminiſtration of affairs, while the new king elect is removed ſome miles from the capital, there to learn the art of government; the firſt fruit of which, on his return, is putting to death the reſt of his brothers. He rarely ſhews himſelf, and always with pomp amidſt his wives and concubines: his revenues are conſiderable, and he can bring an army of 100,000 men into the field. As to their religion, they ſeem to have an idea of, and a reverence for a Supreme Being, but mixed with a number of idolatrous and abſurd ceremonies. The dreſs of the inhabitants is neat and ornamental; the rich among them wear firſt white callico, or cotton petticoats, about a yard in length, and half a yard in breadth, by way of drawers. This they cover with another fine piece of callico of ſixteen or twenty yards, which they very artfully and becomingly plait in the middle, throwing over it a ſcarf, a yard long, and a foot wide, the ends of which are adorned with a handſome lace, or fringe. As to the upper part of the body, it is moſtly naked. Such is the dreſs in which they appear in public; at home their cloathing is more ſimple and leſs expenſive, conſiſting only of a coarſe paan for drawers, covered with a large painted cloth, worn in the manner of a cloak, of home manufacture.

BENIN, a city of Africa, and capital of Benin. The ſtreets are prodigious long and broad, where are continual markets for kine, cotton, elephants' teeth, and European wares; notwithſtanding which they are kept very clean. The houſes are large and handſome, with clay walls, and covered with reed, ſtraw, or leaves. The town is pleaſantly ſituated on the river Formoſa. It was once a very populous place, but now not ſo. The king's court is ſituated in a large plain. The inhabitants are all natives, foreigners not being permitted to live in the city. Here are ſeveral rich men, who continually attend court, not troubling themſelves with either trade, agriculture, or any thing elſe, but leave all to their numerous wives, who go to all the circumjacent villages, to trade in all ſorts of merchandiſes, or otherwiſe ſerve for daily wages, and are obliged to bring the greateſt part of their gains to their huſbands. All male ſlaves here are foreigners; for the inhabitants cannot be ſold for ſlaves, only they bear the name of the king's ſlaves. Long. 20. 30. E. Ferro. Lat. 7. N.

BENISUEF, a town of Egypt, on the Nile, the capital of a diſtrict, and reſidence of a bey: it is large, with manufactures of ſtuff made of woollen and linen mixed; the houſes are built with bricks baked in the ſun: 50 miles S. Cairo. Long. 48. 44. E. Ferro. Lat. 29. 14. N.

BERG, a duchy and principality of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, bounded on the weſt and ſouth by the archbiſhopric of Cologn, from which it is ſeparated by the Rhine; on the north by the duchy of Cleves, and on the eaſt by the duchy of Marck: about 60 miles long, and from 8 to 22 in breadth. The country along the Rhine is flat and fertile, and produces great quantities of corn: on the hills the inhabitants cultivate vines, in the vallies are meadows, and upon the mountains vaſt foreſts. There are mines of lead, iron, and coal. The inhabitants conſume more wheat than they grow. The principal manufactures are ſwords, knives, and other articles of iron and ſteel. There are alſo ſome manufactures of cloth, ribands, and handkerchiefs. The principal rivers are the Wipper, the Seig, and the Ruhr: the principal towns are Duſſeldorf, Everfeld, Gemarke, Ronfdorf, Solingen, Lennep, &c.—This duchy belonged to the elector palatine. In the year 1795, it was entirely overrun by the French.

BERG, a town of Norway: 12 miles S. Frederickſtadt.

BERG-OP-ZOOM, a maritime town of Dutch Brabant, ſituated on the river Zoom, at its union with the Scheldt; firſt ſurrounded by a wall in 1287, by Gerard de Weſemael, firſt lord of the town, and erected into a marquiſate by the emperor Charles V. in 1533. The church is a beautiful ſtructure, and was made collegiate in 1442. This is one of the ſtrongeſt places belonging to the Dutch, having been regularly fortified in 1629, and eſteemed nearly impregnable: towards Antwerp is a grand half moon, extending to a fort called Kyck-in-de Pot, furniſhed with four redoubts, and well mounted with cannon; by a canal which communicates with the Scheldt, ſuccours may be thrown into the place during a ſiege: between the town and the ſea are eleven forts well ſupplied, with a number of redoubts and palliſadoes: towards Steenberg alſo the outworks are very ſtrong, with a number of redoubts and intrenchments. Berg-op-Zoom had its particular lords ſo long ſince as the year 1211. After the death of John de Glimes, whom the ducheſs of Parma ſent into Spain, and who died in priſon in the year 1567, the marquiſate came to Eitel Frederick, prince of Hohenzollern, of the houſe of Brandenburg, by a marriage with Elizabeth de Berg, heireſs of the late marquis: With their daughter it was received as a marriage portion by Maurice de la Tour d'Auvergne, governor and ſeneſchal of Limoſin, &c. This prince died in 1707, leaving his ſon Conſtantin, who quitted the ſervice of France, and retired to Holland, where he was made lieutenant-general of the Dutch forces. In 1707, he eſpouſed Mary Anne, daughter of Philip duke of Aremberg and Arſchot, by whom he had one only daughter, Mary Henrietta, and died in 1710, at Douay, in the flower of his age. The commander, Don Louis de Requeſens, governor of the Netherlands, was defeated near this place, on the 29th of January, 1574. The town of Middleburg being much preſſed by the confederates, he equipped a fleet, which he divided to occupy both branches of the Scheldt, to ſail towards Zealand. One part he entruſted to John de Glimes, the vice-admiral, and Julien Romero; the other to Don Sanchez Avila. The two firſt were defeated by the Zealanders, under the command of Louis Boiſſot, admiral of Zealand, who loſt an eye in the engagement. The conquerors took nine ſhips, and burnt the Spaniſh admiral; Glimes was ſlain: Romero ſwam to ſhore. The commander being on the bank was witneſs of the unfortunate ſucceſs of the enterprize, of the whole of which he was informed by Airla, who retired to Antwerp.

The prince of Parma attempted to take it in 1588, without ſucceſs; and in 1622, the marquis of Spinola laid ſiege to it again, but the beſieged defended themſelves ſo valiantly, and the prince of Orange took ſuch meaſures to throw ſuccours into the place, that the marquis was obliged to raiſe the ſiege on the 2d of October, after having loſt more than 10,000 men, from the 18th of July, when he began his approach. In the year 1746, the marechal Saxe, having amuſed the allies with marches and counter-marches, at length detached count Lowendahl, with 36,000 men, to beſiege Berg-op-Zoom. It was ſecured with a garriſon of 3000 men, and well provided with artillery, ammunition, and magazines. The enemy appeared before it on the 12th day of July, and ſummoned the governor to ſurrender. The prince of Saxe-Hildburghauſen was ſent to its relief, with twenty battalions and fourteen ſquadrons of the troops that could be moſt conveniently aſſembled: he entered the lines of Berg-op-Zoom, where he remained in expectation of a ſtrong reinforcement from the confederate army; and the old baron Cronſtrom, whom the Stadtholder had appointed governor of Brabant, aſſumed the command of the garriſon. The beſiegers carried on their operations with great vivacity, and the troops in the town defended it with equal valour. The eyes of all Europe were turned upon this important ſiege: comte Lowendahl received divers reinforcements, and a conſiderable body of troops was detached from the allied army, under the command of baron Schwartzemburg, to co-operate with the prince of Saxe-Hildburghauſen. The French general loſt a conſiderable number of men by the cloſe and continual fire of the beſieged; while he, in his turn, opened ſuch a number of batteries, and plyed them ſo warmly, that the defences began to give way. From the 16th day of July to the 15th of September, the ſiege produced an unintermitting ſcene of horror and deſtruction; deſperate ſallies were made, and mines ſprung with the moſt dreadful effects; the works began to be ſhattered, the town was laid in aſhes, the trenches were filled with carnage, nothing was ſeen but fire and ſmoke, nothing heard but one continued roar of bombs and cannon. But ſtill the damage fell chiefly upon the beſiegers, who were ſlain in heaps, while the garriſon ſuffered very little, and could be occaſionally relieved or reinforced from the lines. In a word, it was generally believed that comte Lowendahl would be baffled in his endeavours; and by this belief the governor of Berg-op-Zoom ſeems to have been lulled in a blind ſecurity. At length ſome inconſiderable breaches were made in one ravelin and two baſtions, and theſe the French general reſolved to ſtorm, though Cronſtrom believed they were impracticable; and on that ſupppſition preſumed that the enemy would not attempt an aſſault. For this very reaſon comte Lowendahl reſolved to hazard the attack, before the preparations ſhould be made for his reception. He accordingly regulated his diſpoſitions, and at four o'clock in the morning, on the 16th day of September, the ſignal was made for the aſſault. A prodigious quantity of bombs being thrown into the ravelin, his troops threw themſelves into the foſſe, mounted the breaches, forced open a ſally-port, and entered the place almoſt without reſiſtance. In a word, they had time to extend themſelves along the curtains, and form in order of battle, before the garriſon could be aſſembled. Cronſtrom was aſleep, and the ſoldiers upon duty had been ſurpriſed by the ſuddenneſs and impetuoſity of the attack. Though the French had taken poſſeſſion of the ramparts, they did not gain the town without oppoſition. Two battalions of the Scottiſh troops, in the pay of the States General, were aſſembled in the market-place, and attacked them with ſuch fury that they were driven from ſtreet to ſtreet, until freſh reinforcements arriving, compelled the Scots to retreat in their turn, yet they diſputed every inch of ground, and fought until two-thirds of them were killed upon the ſpot. Then they brought off the old governor, abandoning the town to the enemy; the troops that were encamped in the lines retreating with great precipitation; all the forts in the neighbourhood immediately ſurrendered to the victors, who now became maſters of the whole navigation of the Scheldt. Berg-op-Zoom was reſtored to the Dutch at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle: 18 miles NNW. Antwerp. Long. 21. 46. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 29. N.

BERGAMASCO, a country of Italy, belonging to the ſtates of Venice, bounded on the north by the country of the Griſons, on the eaſt by the Breſſin, on the ſouth by the Cremaſco, and on the weſt by the Milaneſe; towards the north it is mountainous and uncultivated; in the environs of Bergamo it is exceedingly fertile; ſome of the vallies produce large quantities of wine and oil, others are unproductive. In the mountains are mines of iron. The people in general are inclined to corpulency, and ſubject to the goitre, or rupture of the throat, nevertheleſs they are intelligent in commerce, and carry on a conſiderable traffic in iron, wool, carpets which they manufacture, cattle, marble, and millſtones.

BERGAMO, a city of Italy, and capital of the country of Bergamaſco, fortified with walls, baſtions, and ditches, ſituated upon ſeveral ſmall hills. Between the city and a lofty mountain is a ſtrong caſtle. It has ſeveral ſuburbs; in one of which is kept a large fair at the feaſt of St. Bartholomew, at which a vaſt concourſe of merchants aſſembles from Italy, Germany, and Swiſſerland. It is the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Milan, and contains thirteen pariſh churches, twelve convents for men, ten for women, and about 30,000 inhabitants. The principal commerce is wool and ſilk, the former has been prodigious, and the ſerges as well as the tapeſtry of Bergamo have been celebrated. Their ſilks equal thoſe of Turin; the inhabitants are active and laborious. Their language is a bad Italian: the environs are ſandy, but made very fertile by the induſtry of the inhabitants. Louis XII. of France, after defeating the Venetians at the battle of Agnadel, ſeized on this city; but reſtored it to the republic ſix years after, by the treaty of 1515: 25 miles NE. Milan, 26 NW. BERKHAMSTED, a town of England, in the county of Herts, near which formerly ſtood a caſtle, ſurrounded by a moat, ſome ruins of which are viſible. In the year 697, a parliament is ſaid to have been held here, and king Ina's laws publiſhed. In this place William the Conqueror ſwore to obſerve the laws of the land. The caſtle was built, or rather reſtored by the earl of Cornwall, brother to the Conqueror; but in the reign of Henry I. was ſeized by the crown: in the reign of King John it was taken by the barons. Great part of the caſtle was demoliſhed, and a houſe built on its ſite, but a part of it remaining, was held by colonel Axtel for the parliament againſt king Charles I. King Henry II. kept his court here, and James I. had his children nurſed in this town, on which account he made it a corporation: but it ſuffered ſo much in the enſuing reign that they ſuffered the charter to drop. BERKSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the north by the counties of Oxford and Buckingham, from both which it is divided by the river Thames, on the eaſt by Surry, on the ſouth by Hampſhire, and on the weſt by Wiltſhire. The ſhape is very irregular, eſpecially towards the north, yielding every where to the winding of the Thames, which from Oxford to Reading takes a courſe about ſouth-ſouth-eaſt, making the county at the latter town very narrow. After the Thames has paſt by Reading it tends northerly, but ſtill the eaſtern part of the county is much narrower than the weſtern. From eaſt to weſt its length is about 50 miles; from north to ſouth, in its wideſt part, 25, in its narroweſt, little more than 5. The number of ſquare miles is computed to be 682, and the number of acres 438,977. It is divided into twenty hundreds, in which are 12 market towns, and about 200 villages, and the number of inhabitants 115,000. The ſoil of Berkſhire is in general loamy, in ſome parts mixed with gravel, in others with ſand. The weſtern part of Berkſhire contains ſome land of a rich deep ſoil, particularly in what is called the Vale of White Horſe, equal to the beſt parts of England. Of the quantities of land 170,000 acres are ſuppoſed to be contained in incloſed lands, parks, and woods; 220,000 in common fields and downs; 40,000 in foreſts, waſtes and commons; and 8,977 in roads. The market towns are Abingdon, Farringdon, Hungerford, Ilſley, Lambourn, Maidenhead, Newbury, Reading, Wallingford, Wantage, Windſor, and Wokingham. The principal rivers are the Thames, Iſis, Kennet, Ocke, Lamboure, and Loddon. It produces a great deal of corn, and great quantities of meal and malt are ſent in barges by the river Thames to London. This county returns 9 members to the Britiſh parliament, viz. two for the county, one for the borough of Abingdon, and for Reading, Wallingford, and Windſor, two each.

BERLIN, a city of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and capital of the eſtates of the king of Pruſſia, is ſituated on the banks of the Spree, which is here divided into three branches. On the ſouth it is defended by a wall, on the north only by palliſades; it has 15 gates, the ſtreets are ſtraight, wide, and long. In the year 1645, it had only 1236 houſes; in 1747, it had 5513, and in 1779, 6437. In the year 1774, the number of inhabitants were 104,874; of theſe 5381 were French, 1162 Bohemians, and 3958 Jews; the garriſon, reckoning their attendants, amounted to 29,540 ſouls, which may be added to the number of inhabitants. There are 25 churches, 2 houſes for invalids, an academy for ſciences, another for painting, ſculpture, and architecture, a college of medicine, a military academy, 4 colleges, 4 gymnaſia, many public ſchools, libraries, and manufactures. It is compoſed of 5 ſeparate towns, under the ſame magiſtrate. Berlin, properly ſo called, was built in the 12th century, by a colony from the Netherlands, brought thither in the reign of Albert the Bear: Cologne or Cœln, is joined to Berlin by a bridge over the Spree, which ſurrounds it, and forms it into an iſland; it was built at the ſame time as Berlin, and by the ſame people. Frederickſwerder is alſo built on an iſland in the Spree, by the elector Frederick William, and contains 19 ſtreets. Dorotheeſtadt, or Neuſtadt, was built by the elector Frederick William, and ſo named after his conſort. Frederickſtadt, which is the largeſt of the five towns, was built by the elector Frederick III. All religions are tolerated, the Roman Catholic, the Lutherans, Calviniſts, and Jews, have free exerciſe of their religion; by means of canals there is a free communication between the Spree and the Oder, and the Spree and the Elbe. Long. 31. 8. BERMUDAS ISLANDS, or Somers Iſlands, a cluſter of ſmall iſlands, ſituated on the Atlantic Ocean. They received their former name from John Bermudas, a Spaniard, who diſcovered them in the year 1503; the other name they take from Sir George Somers, an Engliſhman, who was wrecked on them in the year 1609. They were granted by the Spaniſh King, Philip II. to Don Ferdinand de Camelo, who however never took poſſeſſion. An Engliſh ſhip was forced on them by ſtreſs of weather in the year 1593. Sir George Somers, and his brothers, formed the firſt ſettlement ſoon after his ſhipwreck. They are in number 400 or more, but for the moſt part ſo ſmall and ſo barren, that they have neither inhabitants or name. Hardly one eighth part is inhabited. The moſt conſiderable of theſe iſlands are St. George, St. David, Cooper, Ireland, Somerſet, merſet, Long Iſland, Bird Iſland, and Noneſuch. The firſt has a town, the two following ſome villages, the others only farms diſperſed. The air is ſo healthy, that ſick people from the continent of America frequently go thither for the recovery of their health. The winter is hardly perceptible, it may be ſaid to be perpetually ſpring, the trees never loſe their verdure, and the leaves only fall when new ones begin to appear, birds ſing and breed without intermiſſion; but theſe advantages are counterbalanced by frightful ſtorms, accompanied by formidable thunders, which are announced by a circle round the moon. Some fertile plains are ſeen, but in general the country is mountainous. The ſoil is of divers colours, brown, white, and red, of which the former is the beſt; although light and ſtony, it is in general rich and fertile; the water is in general ſalt, having but little freſh, except rain water preſerved in ciſterns. The inhabitants gather two harveſts of Indian corn in a year, one in July, the other in December: this forms the principal food of the inhabitants. They likewiſe cultivate tobacco, legumes, and fruit ſufficient for their wants. Their trees are principally the cedar and palmetto, the former is much eſteemed for its fragrance, its durability and beauty, and for the facility with which it is wrought. Of this wood they build their ſhips, and often their houſes and churches. The palmetto, a ſpecies of wild palm, is not leſs common, nor leſs uſeful; the fruit reſembles a plumb in its colour, form, and ſize; the wood ſerves for building, and the leaves, which are of an amazing length, are uſed to cover houſes. Beſides theſe, they have orange trees, olive, laurels, pear trees, &c. The red wood is peculiar to theſe iſlands, its coloured fruit feed worms, which change to flies, a little larger than cochineal, inſtead of which they are uſed. Another plant peculiar to them is a kind of creeping darnel, whoſe root is moſt powerfully emetic. Here are a great variety of birds, both of land and water; fiſh likewiſe abound upon the coaſt. Among the inſects the ſpider is remarkable for its large ſize, but its beautiful colours diminiſh the diſguſt it inſpires; its web is in colour and ſubſtance a perfect raw ſilk, and running from tree to tree, ſmall birds are ſometimes ſo entangled as hardly to be able to eſcape. There are no venomous reptiles in the iſland. In the year 1765, a ſociety of the principal inhabitants engaged to form a library of all books of economics in every language; to employ all healthy perſons of both ſexes, according to their talents and their character, and to reward thoſe who ſtrike out any new art, or improve one already known; to provide for the honeſt workman, who is become old or paſt labour; and to indemnify any individual who ſhould from any circumſtance be oppreſſed. Building of ſhips and ſloops is the principal trade of the inhabitants. Theſe iſlands extend from north-eaſt to ſouth-weſt about 15 leagues: the whole ſhore is ſurrounded with rocks, moſt of which are dry at low water, but covered at flood: 240 leagues SE. from Cape Fear in Virginia, and 280 E. from the continent of South Carolina. The north point of theſe iſlands lies Long. 63. 28. W. Greenwich. Lat. 32. 34. N.

BERN, a canton of Swiſſerland, bounded on the eaſt by the cantons of Uri, Unterwalden, Lucern, and the county of Baden, on the north by the Auſtrian foreſt towns, and the cantons of Bâle and Soleure, on the weſt by the canton of Soleure, the county of Bienne, and a part of France, and on the ſouth by the lake of Geneva, the Valais, and the duchy of Savoy. This canton is well cultivated, and very populous; its length is about 60 leagues and its breadth 30. It is far the largeſt of all the cantons, and comprehends one third of all Swiſſerland. The plains are fertile in corn and fruit, the lofty Alps afford abundance of excellent paſturage, and ſupport numerous flocks, from whoſe milk they make butter and excellent cheeſe. The moſt beautiful and moſt fertile ſpots are on the ſides of the lakes of Geneva and Neufchatel; here grow the moſt excellent fruits, and here they make the moſt excellent wines. Near Bern they find a white clay, farther on red, white, black and blue. Near Grandſon is a blue clay, uſed for pottery; in other places are found ſtone of different ſorts, plaſter of Paris, cryſtal, ſalt ſprings, coal, ſulphur, mines of iron, copper, lead, and ſilver, and medicinal baths. They count 39 towns, great and ſmall, and 1300 villages. The number of inhabitants is eſtimated according to ſome at 340,000, according to others at 400,000. In ſome parts of the country they ſpeak French, but German is the moſt general language. Horſes, cheeſe, linen cloth, coarſe cloth, made of hemp, cloth of cotton, and woollen ſtuffs, are the principal articles of exportation. They ſend annually from this canton 10,000 pieces of linen, the principal part of which goes to Lyons. At Bern they have alſo manufactures of ſilk, chiefly ſtuffs and coloured ſtockings. In the weſtern part of the mountains the principal employment is clock-making, and poliſhing falſe ſtones. The whole canton profeſſes the reformed religion. This canton firſt united to Uri, Schwitz, and Unterwalden in 1353, and from that time has been accounted among the members of this league. Its power has exalted it to the ſecond rank, and its extent of country has increaſed inſenſibly by purchaſe, treaties and conqueſt; the government is ariſtocratical. The militia is formed of 21 regiments of infantry, and 4 regiments of dragoons. Each diſtrict is governed by an officer, called a bailiff, who reſides in his bailiwick as long as his office continues: he is choſen by lot, and every year gives an account of his charge.

BERN, a city of Swiſſerland, and capital of the canton of the ſame name. It is ſituated on the Aar, which waſhes three ſides, and forms a peninſula. To the weſt it is fortified by walls, ditches, and ramparts; the ſtreets are wide, and the houſes, in general, built with ſtone. Among the public buildings are the town-houſe, public grammar ſchool, or academy, arſenal, well ſupplied with arms and military ſtores, and a public granary. The great church was founded in 1421, and is eſteemed a moſt beautiful piece of architecture: 45 miles S. Bâle, and 78 NE. Geneva. Long. 26. 59. E. Ferro. Lat. 46. 59. N.

BERWICK UPON TWEED, a town of England, ſituated on the north or Scotch ſide of the Tweed, and a county of itſelf, regularly fortified with walls, baſtions, and ditches : it formerly belonged to Scotland, and was the capital of the county of Berwick, and ſeveral times taken and retaken by the Engliſh, till the year 1482, when it was taken by the duke of Glouceſter, brother to Edward IV. and has ever ſince belonged to the Engliſh. The river is broad, with a bridge over it of ſixteen arches. The town is of much leſs extent than formerly, the old caſtle, now gone to decay, lies at ſome diſtance from the ramparts. The barracks are large, and capable of containing two regiments of foot with convenience. Abundance of wool is exported from this town : eggs in vaſt abundance, collected through all the country almoſt as far as Carliſle, they are packed up in boxes with the thick end downwards, and are ſent to London for the uſe of ſugar refiners. The ſalmon fiſheries here are very conſiderable, and likewiſe bring vaſt ſums : they lie on each ſide the river, and are all private property, except what belongs to the dean and chapter of Durham, which in rent and tythe of fiſh brings in 450l. per annum ; for all the other fiſheries are liable to tythe. The common rents are 50l. a year, for which tenants have as much ſhore as ſerves to launch out and draw their nets on : the limits of each are ſtaked ; one man goes off in a ſmall flat bottomed boat, ſquare at one end, and taking as large a circuit as his net admits, brings it on ſhore at the extremity of his boundary, where others aſſiſt in landing it. The beſt fiſhery is on the ſouth ſide, very fine ſalmon trout are often taken here, which come up to ſpawn from the ſea, and return in the ſame manner as the ſalmon do. The chief import is timber from Norway and the Baltic. It is governed by a mayor, recorder, town-clerk, and four bailiffs ; and ſends two members to the Britiſh Parliament. It has a weekly market on Saturdays : 54 miles S. Edinburgh, and 335½ N. London.

Beſançon is ſituated in a bottom between mountains, on the Doubs, whoſe waters almoſt ſurround and divide it into Upper and Lower town, joined by a handſome bridge. It has ſix gates, three to the upper and three to the lower town. It is ſtrong both by art and nature, being defended by a wall flanked with eight towers like baſtions : the citadel is a long ſquare built on a ſharp rock : under the Romans it was one of the moſt magnificent places which they had in Gaul, and many remains of their ſuperb buildings are yet viſible : after the death of Julian, it was nearly deſtroyed by the Germans, and a ſecond time by Attila. It afterwards became an imperial city, till the time of Louis XIV. who, in the year 1674, made himſelf maſter of it, and united it to France. The univerſity is an ancient and celebrated foundation, and in the year 1752, a literary and military ſociety was inſtituted there. It contains 8 pariſhes, and the number of inhabitants computed at 20,000 : 26 poſts SSW. Straſburg, 11 E. Dijon, and 48 ESE. Paris. Long. 23. 40. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. 14. N.

BEVERLEY, a town of England, in the eaſt riding of Yorkſhire, is of great antiquity; firſt began to be noticed by the retirement of John de Beverley, archbiſhop of York, in 717, who lived here four years, built a monaſtery, and died in 721. In honour of whom, ſeveral kings, particularly Athelſtan, who choſe him guardian ſaint, endowed the place with many privileges and immunities, and particularly, that the freemen ſhould be free from all manner of tolls whatſoever throughout all the kingdom of England. This ſo encreaſed its trade and extent, that it was found neceſſary to draw a channel of ſix furlongs from the river to the town, for conveyance of foreign commodities by barges, &c. It appears there had been a church here before John de Beverley, and that it was burned in 1188. The town is now governed by a mayor, annually choſen the Monday before Michaelmas, twelve aldermen, a recorder, &c. who weekly hold a court of record for all ſums whatever, except titles of lands. It ſent two members to parliament in the reign of Edward I. The ſeſſions for the eaſt riding of York are always held here. A houſe and office has been built for the public regiſter of all deeds, wills, &c. that affect any lands, &c. in this riding, purſuant to an act of parliament 1708, which is an additional advantage, and ſuch as no county in England, beſides Middleſex and Yorkſhire, can yet boaſt of. Its principal manufactures are malt, oatmeal, and tanned leather; but the poor people ſubſiſt moſtly by making lace. Trade here is much increaſed ſince, for, by act of Parliament in 1727, the cut, above-mentioned, called Beverley Beck, from the town to the river Hull, which runs into the Humber, was cleanſed, deepened, and widened, and thereby made navigable for large veſſels. Here are two markets, Wedneſday for cattle, and Saturday for corn, which is brought hither in great quantities, and great variety of fiſh and fowl to both, with other proviſions. BEWDLEY, or Beaulieu, a town of England, in the county of Worceſter, ſituated on the ſide of the river Severn. According to tradition this town is ſaid to have been within the juriſdiction of the marches of Wales; but by a ſtatute in the reign of Henry VIII. it is made a parcel of the county of Worceſter. It takes its preſent name from its agreeable ſituation on the declivity of a hill over the weſtern bank of the Severn. The ceremony of prince Arthur's marriage was performed here, himſelf attending in perſon, with Katharine of Aragon by proxy, on the 29th of May, 1499, and here his corpſe reſted in the year 1502, in its way from Ludlow to Worceſter for interment. Formerly there were two weekly markets on Wedneſday and Saturday; but the Wedneſday's market is diſcontinued. It is a borough town, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament, and is governed by a bailiff, aldermen, and burgeſſes. The ſituation of Bewdley, in the midſt of a populous and manufacturing county, has made it long a flouriſhing town. Several trades are exerciſed here. Tannery has been long an eſtabliſhed buſineſs. The Dutch and ſailors caps made here are valued for the excellence of the napping; they ſeem to have been worn all over England, by all ranks of people, till the introduction of fur hats by the French refugees, in the year 1685. Here alſo is an inconſiderable manufactory of white thread-lace and edgings, which are made in ſome parts of this county in large quantities. A navigable river comes to this place, but no farther, called the Ivell; it joins the Bedford river, called the Ouſe, at Temps Ford, and thence runs to Lynn-Regis. It ſerves principally to bring up coals, timber, oats, and merchandize, from Lynn, to ſupply this and the neighbouring towns and villages, which it does with great convenience, being ſo ſituated in the centre, as to check and receive checks from the neighbouring towns. Here was a terrible fire on June 16th, 1785, which raged with aſtoniſhing fury, and in a few hours laid about 150 dwelling-houſes in aſhes, beſides ſeveral malt-houſes, corn-chambers, &c. all in the centre of the town, around the market-place. The loſs was eſtimated at 24,000l. On the 25th of February, 1792, a ſmart ſhock of an earthquake was felt at this place, about half paſt eight in the morning, which threw down ſome old houſes; but happily no lives were loſt; it laſted ſeveral ſeconds, and conſiderably alarmed the inhabitants. The ſhock was felt northward of Doncaſter, and extended towards the ſea-coaſt of Lincolnſhire and Yorkſhire: 24 miles SW. Cambridge, 24 N. Hertford, and 45 N. London.

BILEDULGERID, a country of Africa, lying ſouth of Tunis and Algiers, ſuppoſed to be about 60 leagues ſquare. According to ſome, and the generally received opinion, it received its name from the Arabia words Biled el gerid, ſignifying the land of dates, becauſe it abounds with that kind of fruit more than any other country in Africa, inſomuch it can furniſh the neighbouring kingdoms with it in exchange for wheat, which here grows ſcarce. But, Dr. Shaw ſays, the name ſeems rather borrowed from the Blaidal Jeridde of the Arabians, who thereby ſignify the dry country. Numidia, is the name by which it was known to the Greeks and Romans. The whole country is very mountainous, ſandy, and barren, producing little or no ſuſtenance, ſome parts of it being quite covered with large thick woods of palm-trees, from which dates are gathered. The climate is hot and unhealthy, the people lean, and of a ſwarthy and ſhrivelled complexion, their eyes being very much hurt by the eaſt winds, which drive the hot ſand into them, and are ſometimes ſo violent as to bury whole hoords of them under it. Another inconvenience they are liable to, and for which we cannot aſſign the reaſon, is, their teeth often drop out of their heads even in youth. Otherwiſe they are healthy and vigorous, and live many of them, to a great age. The plague (ſo frequent in Barbary) is ſcarcely ever heard of here; as to their character, they are repreſented as lewd, treacherous, thieviſh, and cruel. They are a mixture of the ancient Africans and wild Arabs; the former living in ſome kind of cities, towns, or villages; the latter in tents, and ranging from place to place for food and plunder. The country has few rivers and towns. The Arabs think themſelves the noble race, and, being independent, ſometimes for pay ſerve neighbouring princes in war; the reſt follow either the plundering or the hunting trade, which laſt is one of their nobleſt diverſions, eſpecially that of oſtriches. They eat the fleſh, and barter their feathers for corn, pulſe, or other things which they want. Their common food, beſides dates, is the fleſh of oſtriches, goats, and camels; their drink is either the thin liquor, or broth in which ſuch fleſh is boiled, or the milk of their camels, for they ſeldom drink any water, that little they have of it being neither wholſome or pleaſant, and in moſt parts they labour under the want of that.

BIRMINGHAM, a town of England, in the county of Warwick; of late years become one of the firſt manufacturing towns in Europe. In the year 1676 it was not even a market town, and is now not a corporation, nor has it any chartered privileges. Indeed this very circumſtance appears to be one of the firſt advantages enjoyed by the town. Formerly, tanning of leather was the principal buſineſs carried on by the people of Birmingham; no appearances of that now remain. Before the revolution, the manufactures of Birmingham were confined to coarſe iron ware; ſhortly after that period, ſome of the inhabitants obtained a contract for furniſhing a ſupply of fire-arms to government; ſoon after the button and buckle trade became extenſive: Birmingham was conveniently ſituated, labour, coals, and neceſſaries of life were cheap; manufactures were erected upon a general and extenſive ſcale. Whatever could be deſired, either uſeful or ornamental, in the various branches diſcovered by ingenuity or ſtudy, the endleſs variety of buttons, buckles, trinkets, and jewelry, ſilver and plated, fire-arms, caſt-iron work, mill-work, &c. &c. are all and abundantly ſupplied by Birmingham. Some of the moſt extenſive manufactures in the kingdom are eſtabliſhed here. Inland navigations have increaſed the trade, and will ſtill increaſe it much more by freſh communications. Even London will ſoon receive the manufactures of Birmingham by means of inland navigations. It is ſcarcely 50 years ſince there was not a ſingle mercantile houſe, which correſponded directly from hence with any foreign country, but furniſhed their products for the ſupply of thoſe markets through the medium of merchants in London: at this time the principal orders for foreign ſupply come directly to merchants or manufacturers reſident in the town. The air is naturally exceeding pure, and notwithſtanding the diſadvantages which muſt reſult from its cloſe population, the noxious effluvia of various metallic trades, and, above all, the continual ſmoke ariſing from the immenſe quantity of coals conſumed, it is remarked by the moſt accurate obſerver on the probability of human exiſtence (Dr. Price) to be one of the healthieſt towns of England. The foundation being a dry reddiſh ſand, the loweſt apartments are perfectly free from damp, and hence it follows, that agues, and the numerous tribe of diſtempers accidental to moiſt ſituations, are here unknown: the inſtances of longevity are ſtrikingly numerous, and every means for the preſervation of health has been adopted in this great town, particularly bathing; one of the moſt extenſive and complete ſet of baths in the kingdom being erected at Lady Well. Almoſt every artiſt occupying a ſeparate houſe, they are ſpread over a greater extent of ſurface, and conſequently free from the diſadvantages ſo remarkable in other great towns, where the habitations are larger, and every floor occupied by one or more families; the dwellings, however, of the merchants and principal manufacturers are equal to thoſe of the ſame rank in any other part of the kingdom; and Birmingham boaſts of ſome ſtreets which would even do honour to the capital. Birmingham has two pariſh churches, and four chapels of eaſe. Of the former, St. Philip's is juſtly admired for the beauty of its architecture and ſituation, being built in a light elegant ſtyle, about ſixty years ago. In each ſteeple is a ſet of muſical chimes, which play every three hours, and a different every day in the week. The chapels are all modern handſome edifices, particularly St. Paul's. There were two Preſbyterian meetings; but they were both deſtroyed in the riots in July 1791: they are now rebuilding, and a third is in contemplation. There are alſo three meetings of Independents, one of Quakers, three of Anabaptiſts, a Romiſh chapel, with ſeveral Methodiſt meeting-houſes, and a Jewiſh ſynagogue. Amongſt the charitable endowments, muſt be ranked the general hoſpital. This is a large and convenient edifice, erected on the edge of the town, at above 7000l. expence, voluntarily ſubſcribed, as is its preſent ſupport, amounting to about 1000l. per annum, in which upwards of ſeventy patients are accommodated weekly upon an average, and a ſtill greater number are relieved externally. There is a weekly market on Thurſdays, which is plentifully ſupplied from the country with every kind of proviſion, and well ſtored with live cattle of all kinds. The following compariſon will place in a very ſtriking light the rapid increaſe of population in Birmingham within a century: in 1688, the ſum diſburſed for the poor was 308l. 17s. 9½d. From Eaſter 1786, to Eaſter 1787, 12,429l. 9s. 11¼d. and nearly the ſame for the preceding ſeven years. The number of inhabitants is ſaid to be 60,000: 62 miles NW. Oxford, 23 NW. Warwick, 27 N. Worceſter, and 86½ N. Briſtol.

BISCAY, a province of Spain, bounded on the north by the ſea, on the eaſt by Guipuſcoa, on the ſouth by Alava, and on the weſt by Aſturia. The ſhape is tending to a circle, and meaſures above 30 miles in diameter. The ſoil is unequal and ſtony; in ſome places it produces little or nothing, in others a little wine is made, and ſufficient corn grows for the uſe of the inhabitants. Apples grow in moſt places in the greateſt plenty, of which they make excellent cider, which in ſome meaſure atones for the lack of wine. The ſea ſupplies them with excellent fiſh. Oranges and citrons are exceedingly abundant. There are vaſt foreſts, which produce great quantities of reſin and timber. There are mines of iron, lead, and other more valuable metals. Its convenient ſituation near the ſea, and its vicinity to France, has made it the moſt commercial country of Spain, Lower Andaluſia only excepted. It is computed that the inhabitants yearly manufacture 300,000 quintals of iron and ſteel in arms, nails, iron tools, and bars. The air is mild, pure, and more temperate than in the other provinces of Spain. The Biſcayans have always had the reputation of bravery and courage, and whenever Spain has changed its maſter, they have always been the laſt ſubdued. Biſcay is remarkable for its roads, cultivation, and privileges, but more particularly for the induſtry of its inhabitants. The beſt ſoldiers, and the beſt mariners of Spain are ſaid to be the natives of this country. They have leſs phlegm than the other Spaniards, are more animated, and of a temper more free or open; they are civil, honeſt, and polite, though ſometimes a little vain and proud. Their women are merry, lively, and paſſably handſome. The three provinces of Biſcay, Alva, Guipuſcoa, are the aſylum of liberty and induſtry, and this is the cauſe of their common proſperity. If the king be in want of a certain number of ſoldiers or ſailors, he makes his will known to the province, and the people furniſh their contingency. When a certain ſum is demanded, it is levied upon the different cities and communities, according to a regiſter; ſo that Biſcay may be ſaid to tax itſelf. The language of Biſcay is different, not only from the reſt of Spain, but from the language of any other part of Europe, and is only underſtood by themſelves. Bilbao is the capital. The provinces of Alava and Guipuſcoa are generally united with Biſcay Proper, under the general term of Biſcay.

BOHEMIA, a kingdom of Europe, in Germany, bounded on the north by Luſatia and Upper Saxony, on the eaſt by Moravia and Sileſia, on the ſouth by Bavaria, and on the weſt by Franconia. Although this country is ſituated in the middle of Germany, and its king be an elector of the empire; nevertheleſs, it has its particular aſſemblies, cuſtoms, and language, different from the Germans. The name Bohemia, in the German language, ſignifies the home or abode of the Boii, a people of ancient Gaul, who, under their leader Segoveſus, ſettled in that country about 590 years before the Chriſtian æra. Theſe Boii were ſoon after expelled by the Marcomanni, a nation of the Suevi, who were afterwards ſubdued by the Sclavi, a people of Scythia, whoſe language is ſtill ſpoken in Bohemia and Moravia. Notwithſtanding the expulſion of the Boii, the preſent inhabitants are ſtill called Bohemians by foreigners, but the natives call themſelves Czekowe, or Czechs. At firſt they were governed by dukes, but the emperor Otho I. conquered the duke of Bohemia, and reduced the province under the empire. Afterwards Henry V. gave the title of king to Ladiſlaus, duke of Bohemia; and ſince that time theſe kings have been electors and chief cup-bearers of the empire, and the kingdom has been elective; which privileges have been confirmed by the golden bull. Formerly, the kings of Bohemia received the kingdom as a fief of the empire, which ceremony was performed upon the frontiers; after which, the ſtandards of the principalities, of which it is compoſed, were given to them without being torn, and given to the people; as is done with the enſigns of the other fiefs of the empire. Ferdinand I. of Auſtria, having married Anne, ſiſter of Louis, laſt king of Bohemia, who died without iſſue, and being elected king, that kingdom has remained ever ſince in his family. But the crown is conferred with ſome appearance of election, which right the ſtates of that kingdom ſtill pretend to claim, notwithſtanding, by the treaty of Weſtphalia, Bohemia is declared hereditary in the houſe of Auſtria. The Bohemians are fond of the appellation of Czeche, which is derived from the famous Czech, who is much celebrated by their hiſtorians, and brought thither by the Slavi, by which name they are alſo called by the people that ſpeak the Slavonic. The peaſants here are ſlaves to their lords, and the hard yoke which galls them appears to be the cauſe as well as of their ſtiff-neckedneſs, as of their indolence, which latter, among other things, is obſervable in the wretched condition of their villages, though wood is to be found here in great plenty, and building not expenſive among them. In the year 1679, a great part of them raiſed an inſurrection on account of the heavy bondage they laboured under; but for this they were wholly ſtript of the ſmall remains of the rights and privileges which they enjoyed. The owners of free eſtates, who are called in their language Swobodnicy, Diednicy, and Naprawnicy, are at preſent but few in number. To the landed eſtates belong the prelates, lords, knights, and towns. The Bohemian language is a dialect of the Slavonic, or ſomewhat harſher than the dialect of the neighbouring people who ſpeak Slavonic, as they change the conſonants, and in particular the l, more into vowels. Formerly, the Bohemians uſed the ſame letters with the Ruſſians, but in the time of Boleſlaus the Good, the Latin was introduced among them. There is alſo much German ſpoken in the country. The Bohemians are ſuppoſed to have received the Chriſtian faith ſo early as the ſixth century: but it is more certain that they were inſtructed therein by the Greek brethren Methodius and Cyril (the latter of whom was at firſt called Conſtantinus) about the middle of the ninth century: and hence alſo at firſt the Greek religion and cuſtoms were in uſe among them till Boleſlaus the Good introduced the Romiſh method of worſhip there. In the fifteenth century, John Militz began to preach againſt the pope and Roman Catholic clergy, and Matthias Janow trod in his ſteps. The latter was likewiſe followed by John Huſs, Jerom of Prague, and Jacob von Miſa; who partly in the fourteenth, but partly and chiefly in the fifteenth century, oppoſed many doctrines and abuſes of the Roman Catholic church. This at the council of Conſtance brought Huſs and Jerom to the ſtake, and put their adherents, the greateſt part of whom were Bohemians, under the bann, upon which they were ſo irritated, that on this account a bloody war broke out, which continued for many years. Bohemia lies high, is for the moſt part level, enjoys a warm, pleaſant, and wholeſome air, a ſoil fat, and in certain places only ſandy. It is very fertile in corn, conſiderable quantities of which are exported from thence, particularly buck-wheat, millet, garden and orchard fruits, and excellent hops. It likewiſe produces ſaffron, ginger, calamus, and what is called a manna (but by the Bohemians otherwiſe named Ber, being much the ſame with the pannic or fox tail); has alſo good red vines, among which that of mielnicker, and in particular the ſweet and ſtrong podſkalſky, which grows near Auſzg, is principally eſteemed. It yields likewiſe good paſture, numerous droves of cattle, together with excellent chaces, and wild fowl, as alſo bears, lynxes, wolves, foxes, martens, badgers, beavers, and others, with well taſted fiſh of all kinds in the rivers and ponds. The principal exports are, corn, malt, hops, paper, pottery, and glaſs; formerly, there were many ſalt works in Bohemia, but at preſent they neither boil nor dig ſalt, but have it from other countries. In Bohemia there are mines of coals, alum, ſulphur, vitriol, iron, copper, lead, quickſilver, and ſaltpetre. Above 100 towns and places may be named where mine works have been eſtabliſhed. All kinds of marble are likewiſe dug in Bohemia. Among the precious ſtones here, are diamonds, to which not a beautiful luſtre, but a proper hardneſs only is wanting, which is alſo the caſe with its rubies and chryſolites, emeralds, granates, ſaphires, topazes, amethyſts, hyacinths, berills, carbuncles, jaſper, chalcedonies, turquoiſes, cornelians, &c. The ſilver, and in part milk-white pearls, which are gathered at different places in this kingdom, in particular the Watawa, and Wlatawa, are very beautiful. The principal rivers are the Elbe, the Moldau, and the Egra. Bohemia was formerly abundantly ſupplied with towns, boroughs, villages, caſtles and men. In the days of the emperor Rodolphus II. were computed in it 34,700 villages, 732 great and ſmall towns, 124 caſtles, ſeats of the nobility unnumbered, and above three millions of inhabitants. But at preſent it appears very deſolate in compariſon of its former ſtate. During the inteſtine religious wars, and in the ſucceeding irruptions of the Swedes, moſt of the towns, caſtles, and villages in Bohemia were laid waſte, inſomuch that at preſent it contains only 105 great and ſmall towns, and not much above 6000 villages. The number of Seignories, farms, and eſtates in it amounts nearly to 1451. The number of inhabitants is alſo conſiderably decreaſed, ſo that ſome aſſert that not the tenth part of the former number remains at preſent, and that the modern Bohemia is ſcarce the ſhadow of what it was formerly. In the year 1622, and in three or four ſucceeding years, to the number of 30,000 fixed families quitted this country, not to mention women, children, handycraftſmen, and others; and the greateſt part of the nobility alſo who retired. For this reaſon an attentive traveller finds the towns, boroughs, villages, and highways in Bohemia very deſolate. Bohemia is divided into twelve circles, viz. circles of Boleſlaw, Leitmeritz, Saatz with Elnbogen, Pilſen, Prachatitz or Prachin, Bechin, Chrudim, Czaſlau, Kaurzim, Konigingratz, Rachinitz with Schlan, and Beraun with Moldaw. From ſome royal demands or exactions made in later times, we may form a probable conjecture how much this kingdom brings in annually to its ſovereign. In 1742, the emperor Charles VII. exacted of the ſtates, for the ordinary and extraordinary contributions of the kingdom, 6,000,000 of florins. In 1743, the queen Maria Thereſa demanded in general 5,270,000 florins; 2,890,000 florins were for the military ſtate. The revenues of the chamber eſtates or domains, tolls, &c. raiſed here are conſiderable. According to the new regulation of the military ſtate of the collective Auſtrian hereditary countries, the annual contribution of the kingdom of Bohemia to the maintenance thereof amounts to 5,270,488 florins, 44 kruitzers. To the ſtanding militia of 24,000 men, which in the year 1753, were appointed in the Auſtrian hereditary countries, and in times of war were to ſerve towards the completing the field regiments, Bohemia furniſhes 9000.

BOIS-BELLE, or Henrichemont, a ſmall ſovereignty of France, before the revolution; ſituated in Berry, between Bourges and Sancerre, about ten leagues in circumference, containing about 6300 inhabitants; the principal towns are Henrichemont and Bois-belle.

BOIS-BELLE, a town of France, in the department of the Cher: 15 miles NE. Bourges.

BOIS-COMMUN, a town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Loiret, which contains about 1600 inhabitants: 7 leagues NE. Orleans, and 5 W. Montargis.

BOIS-LE-DUC, a city of Dutch Brabant, ſituated on the river Dommel, which there receives the waters of the Aa; its name in the language of the country is Hertogenboſch, the ſame meaning with Bois-le-Duc, i. e. the Duke's Wood, and was ſo called from its being built in a woody country, where the dukes of Brabant were accuſtomed to take the diverſion of hunting. Godfrey, duke of Brabant, to put a ſtop to the incurſions of the Gueldrians into that country, commanded the woods to be cut down in the year 1184, and laid the foundation of a city, which was finiſhed in 1196 by his ſon duke Henry, and conſiderably enlarged in 1453. It is ſurrounded by the waters of the Dommel and Aa, by which they can eaſily lay the country round about under water, and is ſometimes, eſpecially in winter, not to be approached but by boats. It is defended by ſeveral forts; the three principal are thoſe of Crevecœur, near the Meuſe, a large fort called Iſabella, and a ſmall fort called St. Antoine, towards Brabant. It has alſo a caſtle named Pager-Briel, which the States General ordered to be built in the laſt century, to be a check on the Roman Catholics, which were more numerous than the reformed. It has four gates, Vucherpoorte, towards Breda; Hintempoorte, towards Grave and Nimmegen; Orterpoorte, towards Bommel and Utrecht; and St. John's Gate, towards Heuſden. Its fortifications are regular, and the walls are flanked with ſeven baſtions; the approach to it by land is on cauſeways; by water at three gates or avenues called the Boom, the Grand Hekel, and the Petit Hekel. The cathedral, which is dedicated to St. John the Evangeliſt, is one of the moſt beautiful ſtructures in the Low Countries, erected in 1366, by John d'Arkel, biſhop of Liege; it had a wooden tower, ſupported by four ſtone pillars, whoſe height was ſuch as to be ſeen from Antwerp; this was deſtroyed by lightning in July, 1584. Beſides the cathedral, there were four other pariſh churches, only one of which is now appropriated to divine worſhip, viz. that of St. Catherines, the others being employed as warehouſes, or in other meaner uſes. Before it was in the poſſeſſion of the Proteſtants, there were 16 monaſteries; that of the Jeſuits is now the governor's palace. This city ſuffered conſiderably in the 16th century, during the religious wars. At length the Dutch made themſelves maſters of it in 1629; the place being inveſted the latter end of April, capitulation was ſigned the 14th of September, and the garriſon marched out three days after, with their governor, the comte de Grobbendonck, and many of the principal citizens; the religious carrying away with them the miraculous image of the Virgin, which was at firſt placed in the pariſh church of St. Geri, at Bruſſels, by order of the Infanta Iſabella Claire Eugene, but removed in the year 1641 to that of St. James de Cauberghe, by direction of cardinal Ferdinand, brother to Philip IV. king of Spain, then governor of the Netherlands. Pope Paul IV. founded a biſhopric at Bois-le-Duc, in the year 1559, which had juriſdiction over 10 cities, and 189 villages, being about twenty leagues in length and ten in breadth; the principal revenue of this biſhop, who was ſuffragan of the archbiſhop of Malines, aroſe from the abby of Tongerlo. The diſtrict of Bois-le-Duc, which is called Mavory, is ſituated between Holland and Guelderland, having Holland to the north, Upper Guelderland and the duchy of Cleves to the eaſt; the quarter of Antwerp to the weſt, and the biſhopric of Liege to the ſouth. It is divided into five ſmall diſtricts, viz. Campine, Pais de Cuyck, Maeſlant, Ooſterwyck, and Peeland, and comprehends 102 villages, ſome of which are very conſiderable; and 3 cities, Bois-le-Duc, Helmont, and Eyndhoven: 18 miles ENE. Breda, and 42 SSE. Amſterdam. Long. 22. 45. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 42. N.—On the 14th of September, 1794, an engagement took place near this town, between the Britiſh army and the French, in which the latter were victorious; and on the 9th of October, the ſame year, the town was taken by the French.

BOLNKI, a town of Lithuania, in the province of Wilna : 14 miles ESE. Wilkomierz.

BOLOGNA, a city of Italy, and capital of the Bologneſe, anciently called Felſina, a name by ſome ſuppoſed to be derived from Felſinus, a king of the Tuſcans, the founder ; by others, from Felſina, which ſignifies a fortreſs ; about five miles in circumference. It is ſituated at the foot of the Appenines, in a beautiful plain, and contains fifty or ſixty thouſand ſouls. Its form being oblong, it has been compared to a ſhip ; the tower of Aſinelli, 307 feet in height, is called the great maſt. The city is ſurrounded with a ſimple brick wall, ſolid and lofty. The public edifices are magnificent, as well for the architecture as the ornaments, and next to Rome this city contains the moſt beautiful paintings of any in Italy, by the Caraccis, Albano, Guido, Guercino, Raphael, Dominichino, &c. They count near 200 churches : the cathedral is ſimple and noble. Here are found ſome of the richeſt convents in Italy, 35 of men, and 38 of women. It is the ſee of an archbiſhop, who has for ſuffragans the biſhops of Crema, Borgo, St. Donino, Modena, Parma, Piacenza, and Reggio. The academy, which they call Specula, is a magnificent building, divided into many apartments, filled with natural curioſities, machines, inſtruments, &c. The ſchool of painting has been long celebrated. The academy and the univerſity are both in a flouriſhing ſtate. The public theatre is one of the moſt beautiful and largeſt in Italy. The arts are cultivated, and induſtry encouraged ; the ſilk manufactory has flouriſhed from the year 1341 ; there are manufactures of lace, ſilk ſtuffs, crapes, paper, glaſs, playing-cards, artificial flowers, and toys in wax, liqueurs, confectionary, perfumery, &c. The inhabitants are reckoned gay, and free in their manner, good friends and irreconcileable enemies ; frugality and ſimplicity are their principal virtues : 55 miles N. Florence, and 86 SSW. Venice.—This city was taken by the French, in the campaign of 1796 ; and in the ſame year, Bologna, Ferrara, Modena, and Reggio, entered into a treaty to form a republic, under the name of the Reſpublica Ciſpadana.

BOLOGNE, a town of France, in the department of the Upper Marne, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Chaumont : 6 miles N. Chaumont.

BOLOGNESE, a country of Italy in the ſtate of the Church, bounded on the north by the Ferrareſe, on the eaſt by Romagna, on the ſouth by Tuſcany, and on the weſt by Modena ; anciently inhabited by the Boii and the Ligures. It afterwards became a republic under the protection of the emperors. Divided by two factions, one of them had recourſe to pope Nicholas II. who uſurped a deſpotic authority, of which the people ſoon grew tired, and choſe Tadeo Pepoli, a man of great integrity for their firſt magiſtrate, who preſided over their affairs for twelve years with great wiſdom ; but his unworthy ſons ſold Bologna to the archbiſhop of Milan. The people ſhook off this yoke likewiſe, and in the year 1513, they became ſubject to the pope, on condition they might preſerve their privileges. The interior government of the city, the police, and judicature belong to a ſenate, dreſſed in the habit of ancient Rome, with the gonfalonier as preſident, who is changed every two months : other matters are decided by a legate, and vice-legate, aſſiſted by two ſenators ; ſo that, in fact, Bologna is a ſpecies of republic, and keeps an ambaſſador at Rome. The legate is a cardinal, who is changed every three years ; eccleſiaſtical affairs are ſubject to the archbiſhop only.

BOLOTOVA, a town of Siberia : 24 miles NE. Nertchinſk.

BOLSWAERT, a town of the United Dutch States in Frieſland, ſaid to have been built in the year 713, by Bolſwine, ſon of Radbode, king of Frieſland, from whom it took its name. It was ſeveral times laid waſte by the Danes and Normans, at its commencement. It was almoſt burnt down in 1475 ; and again in 1515, when it was rebuilt and ſurrounded with a rampart of earth. Near Bolſwaert was a Ciſtertian abby, called Olde-Cloſter, where the Anabaptiſts retired and fortified themſelves in 1534. In this abby was interred William IV. comte of Holland, and Hainaut, who was ſlain by the Frieſlanders, near Staveren, in the year 1345. About a league from this town is a port, which, though much obſtructed by ſand, is of great utility to the inhabitants. Bolſwaert is about 2 miles round, and was anciently conſidered as one of the Hanſe towns : 13 miles SW. Lewarden, and 7 SSE. Harlingen. Long. 26. 10. E. Ferro. Lat. 53. 2. N.

BOLT-HEAD, a promontory of England, on the ſouth coaſt of the county of Devon : 19 miles SE. Plymouth. Long. 3. 47. W. Greenwich. Lat. 50. 9. N.

BOLT TAIL, a promontory of England, on the ſouth coaſt of the county of Devon : 4½ miles WNW. Bolt-Head.

BOLTON, or Bolton-le-Moor, a town of England, in the county of Lancaſter ; it carries on a great trade in fuſtian and cotton manufactures, of which all the branches are carried on here, and the annual returns are ſaid to exceed a million ſterling : the number of inhabitants about 12000. Navigable canals from Mancheſter and Wigan are a great advantage to the town. The market is on Mondays : 4 miles N. Lancaſter, and 239 N. London.

BOLTSACKEN, or Bokſack, rocks at the north entrance of the Great Belt : 5 miles SE. from the iſland of Samſoe. Long. 10. 40. E. Greenwich. Lat. 55. 48. N.

BOLWYCK, a town of Norway : 40 miles W. Tonſberg.

BOLZANO, or Boſtzen, a town of Germany, in the county of Tyrol : 6 leagues SW. Brixen, and 9 N. Trent. It was taken by the French, in March, 1797.

BOLOANO, a town of Italy, in the Vicentin, belonging to the ſtate of Venice : 2 leagues E. Vicenza.

BOMAL, or Bohemal, a town of the duchy of Luxemburg, ſituated on the Ourte : 7 miles SW. Spa, and 53 NW. Luxemburg.

BOMARZO, a town of Italy, in the ſtate of the Church, and patrimony of St. Peter, once epiſcopal ; 14 miles from Citta Caſtella.

BOMBAY, an iſland in the Indian Sea, near the weſt coaſt of Hindooſtan, about 7 leagues in circumference. It was firſt ſettled by the Portugueſe, and given to Charles II. king of England, as a marriage portion with the infanta Catharine. After the king's marriage, a ſquadron, conducted by the lord Marlborough, was ſent to receive the poſſeſſion and inveſtiture of the iſland from the hands of the viceroy, who had received his Portugueſe majeſty's commands to that effect. His lordſhip ſet ſail with a fleet of five men of war, having Sir Abraham Shipman, appointed governor on board, and arrived at Bombay in September 1663, after a proſperous voyage. The viceroy was diſpoſed to comply with his majeſty's inſtructions; but the ſtrong oppoſition of the clergy, who refuſed to cede the iſland to heretics, terrified the viceroy into their meaſures, and determined him to keep to his new acquired dignity: his obſtinate refuſal to ſurrender the iſland, obliged lord Marlborough, with the fleet, to retire to Swally road for refreſhments. After having laid in a ſtore of neceſſary proviſions, his lordſhip, in January 1664, ſet ſail with two ſhips for England, leaving the reſt of the ſquadron under Sir Abraham Shipman, to ſpend the remainder of the weſtern monſoons in ſome of the neareſt ports. During this time, he buried above two hundred of his men on a deſolate iſland, Anjadiva, where he wintered and ſtayed from April to October. The monſoons being over, the fleet put to ſea, and ſailed for Bombay. On his arrival, Sir Abraham threatened the viceroy and clergy with the vengeance of the kings of England and Portugal, if they longer continued obſtinate, or denied obedience to their majeſties' inſtructions and contracts: at length they conſented to a treaty, by which the inhabitants were to be continued in the free exerciſe of their faith, and poſſeſſion of their eſtates, under the crown of England. The trade of Bombay flouriſhed exceedingly; but the revenues of the place not being equal to the expence of keeping it, and other political and commercial reaſons ſuperadded, obliged the crown to make it over to the company; in which manner they continue to hold it to this preſent time. The principal town is near a mile long, but the houſes are mean, a few only excepted. The ſoil is ſterile, and not capable of improvement; nor has the iſland any good water upon it. The beſt is what they preſerve in ciſterns after rain; that which their wells furniſh having a brackiſh taſte. There are on the iſland ſome fine groves of cocoa nut trees; and the gardens produce mangoes, jacks, and other Indian fruits. They make ſalt in large quantities, by letting the ſea into pits, where the ſun evaporates the watery part, while the ſaline is left behind. As to the air and climate, they are rather unhealthy, although the natives, and perſons ſeaſoned to the country, live eaſily to a good old age. Moſt perſons on their arrival are ſeized with fevers, fluxes, ſcrophulous diſorders, or a diſeaſe they call the barbiers, which wholly enervates the body, and reduces it to a total ſtate of inactivity, and a deprivation of all the loco-motive faculties. After rains, a multitude of venomous creatures appear, which grow to an extraordinary ſize. The inhabitants are a mixture of ſeveral nations, Engliſh, Portugueſe, and Indians, amounting in all to near 60,000. Long. 72. 38. E. Greenwich. Lat. 18. 57. N.

BOMBICHIE, a town of Aſia, in Syria: 44 miles ENE. Aleppo.

BOMENE, a ſea-port town of the ſtate of Zealand, in the iſland of Schowen, with a fortreſs: 1 league E. Brouwerſhaven.

BOMMEL, a town of Holland, in the iſland of Overflakee: 7 miles W. Willemſtadt.

BOMMEL, a ſtrong town of the duchy of Guelders, ſituated on the Wahal, in the iſle of Bommelweert; firſt ſurrounded with a wall by Otho III. count of Guelders, in the year 1229: 60 miles NE. Antwerp, and 7 N. Bois-le-Duc.—It was taken by the Republican troops of France, on the 4th of October, 1794.

BOMMELWEERT, called by Cæſar Inſula Batavorum, is an iſland, formed by the waters of the Meuſe and the Wahal, about 5 leagues in length, from Loveſtein, W. to Fort St. Andrew E. its breadth where wideſt hardly two. It is governed by a dyckgrave, appointed by the Eſtates General, and is well defended by the three forts of St. Andrew, Voorn, and Crevecœur. The firſt has five baſtions, and was built in the year 1599, by the admiral of Aragon, and the cardinal Andrew of Auſtria, lieutenant general of the Spaniſh forces; the ſecond is ſituated in a ſmall iſland, called Voorn, at the eaſt end of Bommelweert, and was conſtructed by the prince of Orange, and thence ſometimes called Fort Naſſau. The third is at the ſouth ſide of the iſland, towards Bois-le-Duc. Theſe three forts were conſtrained to ſurrender to prince Maurice, in the year 1600, merely from the ſoldiers not being paid. The fort of Crevecœur ſurrendered without reſiſtance on the 24th of March, and that of St. Andre on the 8th of May, the garriſon being bribed by the prince, who paid the ſoldiers 125,000 florins. In 1672, the French took the iſland under marſhal Turenne, but, after deſtroying the fortifications, abandoned it the year following. The comte Charles de Manſvelt, paſſing this iſland in the commencement of the religious diſputes with ſome Spaniſh troops, was ſurrounded by ſeveral ſhips of the Hollanders, under the command of comte Hohenlo, who ordered the dikes to be opened, which totally inundated the iſland, ſo that the Spaniards were obliged to retire to the citadel, where they muſt have miſerably periſhed, if the coming on of a ſudden froſt had not obliged the comte to abandon the ſiege, and leave them at liberty to retire. In memory of this miraculous retreat, a chapel was built at Bruſſels, in honour of the immaculate conception of the virgin, next the Dominican church, which being beaten down by bombs, and burned in 1695, was afterwards rebuilt with greater magnificence. The iſland belongs to the province of Guelderland, except the town of Louveſtein, which, with a very ſmall diſtrict at the weſtern end of the iſland, belongs to Holland.

BORCKELOE, or Borcklo, a town of the United States of Holland, in the county of Zutphen, on the confines of the biſhopric of Munſter, ſituated on the river Berckel. Borckeloe has been rendered remarkable, as being the ſubject of two wars, which the ſtates general were engaged in; firſt, againſt the biſhop of Munſter, in 1665: and ſecondly, againſt France, in 1672. The occaſion was this: in 1553, after the death of Joſſe, the laſt of the comtes de Bronchorts, lords of Borckeloe, there was a great diſpute between the biſhop of Munſter and the comte de Lymburg-Styrum. The biſhop aſſerted that Gilbert, comte of Borckeloe had voluntarily done homage for the ſigniory of Borckeloe, which now became a vacant fief. George, comte of Lymbourg, who had eſpouſed Inmegarde of Bronchorſt, the daughter of the laſt comte, Joſſe's brother, being ſupported by the ſtates general, laid claim to Borckeloe, as dependant on the duchy of Guelderland, to whoſe territory it was adjudged in 1616, by an arrêt of a council ſitting at Arnhem. In 1665, the biſhop whoſe name was Chriſtopher Bernard de Ghalen, one of the braveſt men of the age, declared war againſt Holland, ſeized on Borckeloe, and ſeveral places in the provinces of Overiſſel, Groningen, and Zutphen, having levied an army of 35,000 men and being ſupported by ſome other powers; however, in 1667, a peace was made by the mediation of the elector of Brandenburg, and in virtue of a treaty at Cleves, the biſhop renounced his claim to Borckeloe, and its dependencies. In 1672 the quarrel was renewed, and ſerved as a pretence to Louis XIV. to declare war againſt the ſtates general, from whom he took 72 towns in one campaign. The biſhop of Munſter took Borckeloe, which was again reſtored by a treaty concluded at Cologn, the 11th of April 1674; ſince which it has been fortified, and furniſhed always with a good garriſon: 15 miles ENE. BORNEO, the largeſt iſland in the Eaſt-Indian Sea, and before the diſcovery of New Holland was conſidered as the largeſt iſland in the world, being about 800 leagues in circumference. The interior parts are but little known, we can only judge of its productions by thoſe which Aſia and Europe purchaſe, ſuch as gold in duſt and ingots, copper, tin, iron, bezoar, diamonds, pearls, camphor, lac, benzoin, ſandal and other woods, pepper white and black, and the beſt rice of the Eaſt Indies. Cloves and nutmegs are ſaid to grow on the tops of ſome of the mountains, coffee grows here, and a variety of aromatic herbs, lemon, and orange-trees, mangoes, pines, palms, &c. Few countries produce ſuch a variety of beautiful birds, and on the rocks are found a great number of bird's neſts, ſo much eſteemed at the tables of the eaſt. The ourang-outang, ſo like the human form, is found here, as alſo apes and monkeys, white and black, elephants, tygers, panthers, leopards, antelopes, wild boars, &c. The iſland is divided into ſeveral ſtates or kingdoms, which principally take their names from the towns where the chief reſides. Long. 109. to 119. E. Greenwich. Lat. 6. 45. N. to 3. 20. S.

The ſoil is ſtony but fertile, with excellent paſtures: oats, butter, and fiſh, conſtitute the principal riches of the inhabitants. There are mines of coal and quarries of marble in the iſland. Long. 15. E. Greenwich. Lat. 55. 15. N.—In the year 1509, this iſland was pillaged by the Lubeckers: in the year 1645, it was taken by the Swedes, in whoſe poſſeſſion it remained till the year 1658.

BORNO, or Bornou, a large country of Africa, in the eaſtern part of Negroland, on each ſide of the river Niger, with a capital of the ſame name. The country is ſaid to abound in flocks, millet, and cotton; and the inhabitants are repreſented as having neither laws nor religion; holding wives and children the common property of all.

BORNOU, a city of Africa, and capital of a conſiderable country, of the ſame name, ſituated to the ſouth-eaſt of Fezzan, and to the weſt of Nubia. This country is of vaſt extent, from the 16th to the 20th degree of north latitude. The climate is very hot, but not uniformly ſo; two ſeaſons divide the year, one beginning about the middle of April, the other the middle of October: the firſt commences with violent tempeſts of wind, thunder, and lightning, and a deluge of rain, continual for ſeveral days without intermiſſion; during which time the inhabitants confine themſelves to their houſes: the reſt of the ſeaſon, though ſultry, and occaſionally rainy, is ſuch, however, as not to hinder the labours of the huſbandman and ſhepherd. In the other ſeaſon the heat is leſs intenſe, the air is pure and mild, and the weather ſerene. The inhabitants are numerous, and conſiſt of various nations: and it is reported, that thirty different languages are ſpoken in the empire. They are uniformly black, but not of the negro caſt. The dreſs of the greater part is compoſed of ſhirts, made of blue cotton, manufactured in the country, a red cap brought from Tripoli, and a white muſlin turban: gold rings are worn in the noſes by the principal people as a mark of diſtinction. Wheat and barley are ſeldom raiſed in Bornou, but the European horſe-bean, and common kidney-bean are cultivated, with ſome grain peculiar to the country; and, near the city of Bornou, rice and Indian corn. Among the fruits are grapes, apricots, lemons, limes, melons, a fruit like olives, &c.; among the animals are ſheep, cows, goats, horſes, buffaloes, antelopes, lions, leopards, civet-cats, wolves, dogs, a few elephants, oſtriches, partridges, &c. The reptiles of different kinds are numerous, eſpecially ſerpents, ſnakes, ſcorpions, centipedes, and toads. Part of the inhabitants are Mahomedans, and part Pagans. On the death of the king, the ſucceſſor is elected by the people. The king's palace, in the city of Bornou, is ſurrounded with a wall like a citadel, and the whole city has a wall round it fourteen feet in height, with a ditch encompaſſing the whole: the other towns of the kingdom are open. The military force conſiſts chiefly in horſemen, and is ſaid to be greater than that of Morocco. The ſabre, lance, pike, and bow, are the chief weapons; fire-arms are not uſed. The principal commerce conſiſts in gold-duſt, ſlaves, horſes, oſtrich-feathers, ſalt, and civet, which they ſell or give in exchange for copper, braſs, dollars, red woollen caps, cheque, linens, light coarſe woollen cloth, baize, barakans, and carpets: 600 miles SE. BOSNIA, a province of European Turkey, bounded on the north by Sclavonia, from which it is ſeparated by the river Save, on the eaſt by Servia, on the ſouth by Servia and Albania, and on the weſt by Dalmatia and Croatia; about 40 leagues in length, and 24 in breadth. It is mountainous, but fertile, eſpecially near the rivers, the arable land producing good wheat, and the paſtures feeding a great quantity of cattle: and in the mountains are mines of ſilver. It was anciently that part of Pannonia called Inferior, and took its preſent name from the river Boſna, which runs through ſome part of it, into the Save. It became in time part of the kingdom of Hungary; and ſeveral provinces being after added, was erected into a kingdom, and governed by kings of its own from 1351 till 1465, when the Turks made themſelves maſters of it. Stephen, the fifth and laſt king, was taken by Mahomet II. and flayed alive; the Turks ſubdued the whole province, and made it the government of a beglerberg, with eight ſangiacs under him. The greateſt part of the inhabitants are Greek Chriſtians, with ſome Mahometans. The principal towns are Bagnialuka, Serajo, Zwornick, and Srebernik.

BOSOK, a town of Hungary: 3 miles E. Baja.

It is a borough, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament: 4 miles NW. Camelford.

BOSSUT, a village of Hainaut, celebrated for a battle fought on the 4th of Nov. 1792, between the French, under the command of general Dumourier, and the Auſtrians, in which the latter were defeated, 150 being killed, and 200 made priſoners; the loſs of the French is ſaid to be only twenty: 6 miles from Mons.

BOST, a town of Perſia, and capital of a province of Sableſtan: 30 miles S. Candahar.

BOSTON, a ſea-port town of the United States of North America, in the county of Suffolk, and ſtate of Maſſachuſets, of which it is the capital. It was built the latter end of the year 1630, by a part of the colony which removed hither from Charleſtown, and ſtands upon a peninſula of about 4 miles circumference, at the vety bottom of Maſſachuſetts Bay. It is the moſt advantageouſly ſituated for trade of any place in North America; on the north ſide are ſeveral ſmall iſlands, called the Brewſters. The entrance into the harbour is by a channel, ſo narrow, as well as full of iſlands, that three ſhips can ſcarce paſs in a-breaſt; but within the harbour there is room enough for 500 ſhips to lie at anchor in a good depth of water, where they are covered by the cannon of a regular and very ſtrong fortreſs. The head of this pier joins the principal ſtreet in the town, which is, like moſt of the others, ſpacious and well built; the town has a very fine and ſtriking appearance at entering, as it lies at the very bottom of a bay, like an amphitheatre. The length of the town is about two miles; the greateſt breadth is one mile and 139 yards. The buildings in the town cover about 1000 acres. It contains near 1800 dwelling-houſes, and, by a late computation, 14,600 inhabitants, beſides ſtrangers and accidental viſitors. There are 16 houſes for public worſhip; of which nine are for congregationaliſts, three for epiſcopaliſts, two for baptiſts, one for the friends, and one for univerſaliſts, or independents. The other public buildings are the ſtate-houſe, Faneuil-hall, an alms-houſe, a workhouſe, and a bridewell. That building which was formerly the governor's houſe, is now occupied in its ſeveral apartments by the council, and officers under them. Moſt of the public buildings are handſome, and ſome of them are elegant. The town is irregularly built, but, as it lies in a circular form around the harbour, it exhibits a very handſome view on the approach from the ſea. At the beginning of the American war, Boſton was evacuated by the inhabitants, who were hoſtile to the Britiſh government, on ſurrendering up their arms to general Gage. Boſton was held by the Britiſh troops till the month of March, 1776; when it was given up to the Americans: 225 miles NE. New York, and 310 NE. Philadelphia. Long. 71. W. Greenwich. Lat. 42. 18. N.

BOSTON, a town of England, in the county of Lincoln, nearly ſurrounded by fens, on the river Witham, which is navigable, and forms a port, commodious and well frequented, and much aſſiſted by navigable canals. The church is a handſome ſtructure, and ſerves as a mark to ſeamen. It has only depth of water for ſmall veſſels. The merchants of Boſton carry on ſome trade to the Baltic, but the principal is to London. There are two markets weekly on Wedneſday and Saturday: 34 miles SSE. Lincoln, and 115 N. London.

BOSULS, a town of France, in the department of the Aveiron: 3½ leagues NE. Rhodez.

BOSWORTH, or Market Boſworth, a town of England, in the county of Leiceſter, ſituated on a hill. Near it was fought a battle between Richard III. and the earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII. on the 22nd of Auguſt, 1458, in which Richard was ſlain, and the earl of Richmond crowned in the field: 11 miles W. Leiceſter, and 106½ NNW. London.

BOTANY BAY, a bay on the eaſt coaſt of New Holland, ſo called by captain, then lieutenant Cook, from the great quantity of plants found there by Sir Joſeph, then Mr. Banks, and Dr. Solander, and diſcovered in the year 1770. It is capacious, ſafe, and convenient, and may be known by the land on the ſea coaſt, which is nearly level, and of a moderate height; in general higher than it is farther inland, with ſteep rocky cliffs next the ſea, which have the appearance of a long iſland, lying cloſe under the ſhore. The harbour lies about the middle of this land, and in approaching it from the ſouthward, is diſcovered before the ſhip comes a-breaſt of it; but from the northward it is not diſcovered ſo ſoon: the entrance is a little more than a quarter of a mile broad, and lies in WNW. About the head of the harbour, where there are large flats of ſand and mud, there is great plenty of water-fowl, one of the moſt remarkable was black and white, much larger than a ſwan, and in ſhape ſomewhat reſembling a pelican. On theſe banks of ſand and mud there are great quantities of oyſters, muſcles, cockles, and other ſhell-fiſh, which ſeem to be the principal ſubſiſtence of the inhabitants, who go into ſhoal water with their little canoes, and pick them out with their hands. Long. 208. 37. W. Greenwich. Lat. 34. S.

BOTERNHOFEN, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Holſtein: 9 miles SSW. Nordorp.

Towards the ſouth, and on the ſea coaſt, the land is low and marſhy. The ſummers are often ſo cold as to deſtroy great part of their crops. Eighty thouſand inhabitants, divided into 28 pariſhes, are ſpread over this large ſpace, their cattle are ſmall, and bears are numerous. Their ſalmon fiſhery is abundant, and that of pearls oftentimes ſucceſsful. The principal exports are timber, butter, whale oil, pitch and tar, &c. The principal towns are Cajana or Cajaneborg, Utea, and Chriſtineſtadt, &c. There are ſeveral rivers, which empty themſelves into the Gulf of Bothnia, White Sea, and Gulf of Finland.

BOTHNIA (Weſt), a province of Sweden, ſituated on the weſt ſide of the gulf of Bothnia, bounded on the north and weſt by Lapland, on the ſouth by Angermania, and on the eaſt by the Gulf of Bothnia. The country is tolerably fertile, but ſudden froſts in the month of July oftentimes deſtroy the labourer's hopes. There are mines of copper and iron. The inhabitants are courageous and ſober, the bread they eat has a mixture of the bark of the fir tree. Their flocks, foreſts, and fiſheries, afford them ſubſiſtence, and produce the articles of their commerce, which are principally the ſkins of foxes, ermins, bears, wolves, martens, hyenas, otters, beavers, rein-deers, &c. The principal towns are Umea, Pithea, and Tarnia.

BOTHNIA (Gulf of), a ſea or large gulf, branching from the Baltic, from which it is ſeparated by the iſland of Aland, bounded on the eaſt, weſt, and north by the dominions of Sweden; about 110 leagues from north to ſouth, and from 18 to 35 broad from eaſt to weſt. Long. 35. to 43. BOUILLON, a city and caſtle of the Netherlands, ſituated in the duchy of Luxemburg, and capital of a duchy to which it gives name, built on a rock difficult of acceſs on the river Semoy, which ſoon after joins the Meuſe. The famous Godfrey, general of the firſt cruſade, and firſt king of Jeruſalem, engaged the lordſhip of Bouillon to the biſhop of Liege for the ſum of 1500 ſilver marks, on condition, if he returned, the eſtate was to be returned to him, otherwiſe to remain with the church of Liege. In the 15th century, Bouillon belonged to the count of Marck, by a treaty concluded at Tongres. The emperor Charles V. reſtored it to the biſhop of Liege. The property was ſeveral times diſputed between the biſhops of Liege and the deſcendants of the houſe of Marck, in which the title of duke was inveſted, till the French took it, in 1676, when Lewis XIV. gave it to the duke of Bouillon. In the month of May, 1794, this town was taken by ſtorm by general Beaulieu, after defeating a conſiderable body of republicans, and given up to pillage; 1200 French are ſaid to have been killed, and 300 made priſoners, with 6 pieces of cannon: 6 miles NNE. Sedan, 12 poſts SSE. Liege, and 32 ENE. Paris.

BOULOGNE, or Boulogne-ſur-Mer, a city and ſea-port of France, in the department of the Straits of Calais. It is divided into Upper and Lower town, the former of which is ſurrounded with walls, and contains about 400 houſes. This part was principally inhabited before the revolution by nobility. The lower town lies nearer to the ſea, and is not ſurrounded with walls, and contains a greater number of inhabitants than the upper town, and from its connection with the harbour, monopolizes almoſt the whole of the trade. Before the revolution, it was the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Reims, the ſeat of a governor, a commandant, a king's lieutenancy, &c. The harbour is difficult to enter, and the anchorage not good. There is not depth of water for ſhips of war, and trading veſſels muſt take the advantage of the tide: 4 poſts SSW. Calais, and 30½ N. Paris. Long. 1. 36. E. Greenwich. Lat. 50. 44. N.

BOURBON, a ſmall iſland of Africa, near the coaſt of Senegal. Long. 15. W. Greenwich. Lat. 11. N.

BOURBON, an iſland in the Indian Oean, about 20 leagues long, and 16 broad. It was firſt diſcovered by the Portugueſe, who called it Maſcareique, or Maſcarenhas: other Europeans call it Saint Appollonion, till in the year 1654, Mr. Flancourt, governor of the French ſettlements in Madagaſcar, took poſſeſſion of it, and called it Bourbon. There are many good roads for ſhipping round the iſland, particularly on the north and ſouth ſides: but hardly a ſingle harbour where the ſhips can ride ſecure againſt thoſe hurricanes which blow during the monſoons. Indeed the coaſt is ſo ſurrounded with rocks, ſunk a few feet below the water, that entrance into the harbours, at leaſt coaſting along the ſhore, is at all times dangerous. On the ſouthern extremity there is a volcano, which continually throws up flame, ſmoke, and ſulphur, with a hideous roaring noiſe, terrible in the night to mariners: no leſs ſo, ſays La Croix, than the iſland Del Fuego, mount Hecla, in Iceland, and we may add, mounts Ætna and Veſuvius. The climate, though intenſely hot, is healthy, being refreſhed by cooling gales that blow morning and evening from the ſea or land. Sometimes, however, terrible hurricanes ſhake the whole iſland, and affright the inhabitants; but generally without any other bad conſequence. No country can be more happily watered than Bourbon; every ſide of it is refreſhed by rivulets, ſprings, and murmuring brooks, which tumble in delightful caſcades down the crevices and chinks of the mountains into the ſea. The iſland abounds in fruit, graſs, and cattle; though before the French ſettled upon it, the latter were hardly known, and the country was almoſt a deſert. It produces excellent tobacco, which the French have planted there, aloes, white pepper, ebony, palm, and other kinds of wood and fruit trees, ſpontaneouſly. It even yields wood fit for ſhip building, and a great variety of trees that afford odoriferous gums and reſins; among the reſt, benzoin of an excellent kind, and in great abundance. Notwithſtanding the quantity of white pepper ſhrubs, they never could diſcover either the plant that bears the black pepper, or cubebs, though this laſt has been frequently found with the inhabitants. The rivers are well ſtocked with fiſh, the coaſts with land and ſea tortoiſes, every part of the country with horned cattle, as well as hogs and goats, the former imported from Europe, and ſince exceedingly multiplied. Ambergriſe, coral, and the moſt beautiful ſhells, are gathered upon the ſhore. The woods are filled with game, ſuch as turtle doves, paroquets, pigeons, and a great variety of other birds. Long. 55. 20. E. Greenwich. Lat. 22. 5. S.

BRANDENBURG (The Mark, or Marquiſate of), a country of Germany, bounded on the north by Mecklenburg and Pomerania, on the eaſt by Poland and Sileſia, on the ſouth by Sileſia, Luſatia, the electorate of Saxony, principality of Hainault, and duchy of Magdeburg, and on the weſt by Magdeburg and Luneburg; its greateſt extent, from eaſt to weſt, is about 200 miles, and from north to ſouth, about 110. The country is almoſt uniformly level, in ſome places ſandy, but by good culture is made to yield wheat, rye, barley, and oats in abundance. In the circles of Zauch, and Teltow, the inhabitants cultivate millet and flax, in other places tobacco and woad for dying. Large tracts of waſte lands have been cultivated, ſuperfluous and unprofitable woods have been grubbed up, and deep and large moraſſes have been drained and rendered fertile. The woods here are of great importance, as they furniſh the inhabitants, not only with fuel for domeſtic uſes, but likewiſe for their glaſs and iron houſes, charcoal, tar, and wood-aſhes, large quantities of timber for houſe and ſhip-building, which is partly exported to Hamburg, Holland, France, and other places; and bring into this country yearly large ſums of money in return. Care alſo is taken to keep theſe woods, for the benefit of poſterity, in good condition: but its moſt important ſubſiſtence ariſes from the breeding of cattle, and in particular from the breed of ſheep, in as much as by means of their fine wool divers excellent woollen manufactures have been eſtabliſhed here: for the improvement alſo of their breed of ſheep, King Frederick II. cauſed rams to be imported from Spain and England. The culture likewiſe of ſilk is carried on here with good ſucceſs, and is continually increaſing. The principal minerals in the Mark are a good clay and fine porcelain earth, together with alum, ſaltpetre, amber, and iron ſtone. The principal rivers are the Elbe, the Oder, the Havel, the Spree, the Doſſe, and the Warte. The navigation of theſe have been aſſiſted by navigable canals, which have much increaſed the commerce, and enriched the inhabitants. The whole country is divided into Old Mark, Vor-Mark, or Mark of Pregnitz, Middle Mark, Ucker-Mark, and Neu-Mark. The Semnones were the firſt known inhabitants, theſe were ſucceeded by the Wends, who being driven out, the country was peopled by Saxons, Hollanders, and Flemings. The war of thirty years, peſtilence and famine, which enſued, having almoſt laid it waſte, French refugees, Lorrainers, Walloons, Swiſs, Bohemians, and Germans, were invited to people it anew. The greateſt part of the inhabitants are Lutherans, but all enjoy a liberty of conſcience, and a free exerciſe of their particular religion. Trade and manufactures flouriſh, and the ſciences are cultivated with ſucceſs. Charlemagne conquered this country, but its conqueſt remained not with his ſucceſſors; the people ſoon became free, till they were brought under the government of Otho the Great, who compelled them to pay tribute, and become Chriſtians; he eſtabliſhed biſhops at Brandenburg and Havelburg, but neither the tribute nor religion continued long. They were then governed by their own counts, who afterwards obtained the title of marggrave, one of whom was Albert the Bear, ſon of Otho, of the Aſcanian line, by a daughter of Magnus, duke of Saxony. Albert extended his eſtates, which became under him a part of the empire, and took his title of marggrave from Brandenburg the capital. He built towns, cultivated the arts, and eſtabliſhed the Chriſtian religion. His ſon, Otho I. obtained the dignity of an elector, and arch-chamberlain of the empire. This family becoming extinct in 1320, the emperor, Louis of Bavaria, conferred the electorate on his ſon, who did not preſerve it long. Charles IV. and Wenceſlaus held it afterwards. From them it paſſed to the marggrave of Moravia. In the year 1415, it was ceded to the burgrave of Nuremberg. The principalities of Culmbach and Anſpach have often been united, and often ſeparated. Joachim Frederic eſtabliſhed the right of primo geniture, and attached the Mark to the electorate for ever. In the year 1608, his ſon inherited a part of the duchy of Juliers and Cleves, became duke of Pruſſia, and embraced the Proteſtant religion. His grandſon, the grand elector, augmented his eſtates, and rendered Pruſſia independent. In the year 1701, Pruſſia was erected into a kingdom, and the marquiſate of Brandenburg became an inferior title to the king of Pruſſia.

The Old Mark, is about 12 leagues from eaſt to weſt, and 15 from north to ſouth. It contains 13 towns, of which Stendal is the capital.

The Middle Mark was formerly very marſhy, but being now drained, the ſoil eſpecially near the Oder, is exceedingly fertile. The inhabitants cultivate millet, madder, and buck-wheat; wine too is made, and ſilk-worms are bred in this province; they have manufactures of alum and vitriol, and ſome medicinal ſprings. They reckon 54 towns, among which are Berlin, Brandenburg, and Potzdam.

The Ucker Mark, meaſures about 50 miles in length, and 44 in breadth. The land is exceedingly good and fertile, annually exporting great quantities of corn, beſides fruit, hops, honey, and tobacco. It contains 18 towns, of which Prenzlo is the capital.

The New Mark, about 160 miles in length, and 40 in its greateſt breadth. The ſoil in general is ſandy, though there is good corn land in ſome places. It abounds in wood and game. They count 38 towns, and eſtimate the inhabitants at 216,000. Cuſtrin is the capital.

The Vor-Mark, or Mark of Pregnitz, is ſituated between the rivers Elbe and Havel; the duchy of Mecklenburg, and the Middle Mark. It contains 11 towns, of which Perlberg is the principal. It is about 42 miles long, and 30 broad.

This country was diſcovered in the year 1500, by Alvarez Cabral, a Portugueze. Cabral called it Saint Croiz, but it afterwards obtained the name of Braſil, from the abundance of the wood ſo called found there, which was known in Europe before. The coaſts are in general low, but inland the country is interſperſed with hills, woods, and valleys. The northern parts are ſubject to heavy rains and ſtorms; the ſouthern parts enjoy a temperate climate and a fertile ſoil; in ſome of the provinces are found a great variety of noxious inſects and reptiles, as the liboya, or roebuck ſnake, which is ſaid to grow to the incredible length of thirty feet, and ſeven or eight in circumference; the rattle-ſnake; the ſerpent called ibibaboka, ſaid to be twenty-one feet long, and eighteen inches in circumference, whoſe bite is almoſt inſtant death. No country can produce a greater number of beautiful birds, or a greater variety of excellent fruits; but the chief commodities are Braſil wood, ebony, dying woods, ambergriſe, reſin, balſams, indigo, ſweetmeats, ſugar, tobacco, gold, diamonds, beautiful pebbles, cryſtal, emeralds, jaſper, and other precious ſtones; in all which the Portugueze carry on ſuch an amazing trade as may juſtly be reputed the ſupport, and indeed the vital fountain of the mother country. The mines of gold and diamonds are but a recent diſcovery; they were firſt opened in the year 1681, and have ſince yielded above five millions ſterling annually, of which ſum a fifth belongs to the crown. The diamond mines are farmed at about 30,000l. yearly, which is thought to be ſcarce a fifth of what they actually produce. Braſil is divided into nine governments, each of which has its particular chief, under the viceroy, but receiving their inſtructions from the court at Liſbon. The governors are appointed for three years, and this term prolonged at will. Each diſtrict has a particular judge, from whoſe ſentence an appeal may be carried to the ſuperior tribunals of Rio Janeiro, or Liſbon. The principal towns are Saint Salvador, Saint Luis de Maranion, Fernambuck, Rio Janeiro, and Saint Paul. Long. 16. 30, to 37. 30. W. Ferro. Lat. 0. to 35. S.

BRECKNOCKSHIRE, an inland county of South Wales, bounded on the north by the county of Radnor, on the eaſt by the counties of Hereford and Monmouth, on the ſouth by the county of Glamorgan, and on the weſt by the counties of Cardigan and Carmarthen. Its form is irregular, and contains about 900 ſquare miles, and near 600,000 acres. The borders of the county are for the moſt part mountainous, and every where it is interſperſed with hills. The higher mountains are barren, but the ſmaller hills cultivated to the ſummits: the vallies are in general fertile, but the proportion of good land to bad does not amount to one third. It is divided into ſix hundreds, and contains four market towns, and 61 pariſhes: the towns are Brecknock, Bealth, or Builth, Crickhowel and Hay. The number of inhabitants is eſtimated at rather more than 30,000. The principal rivers are the Wye and the Uſke. Two members are returned to the Britiſh parliament, viz. one for the county, and one for the town of Brecknock.

BREDA, a city of the Netherlands, in the duchy of Brabant, belonging to the Dutch, ſituated on the Aa and Mercke, two ſmall rivers which unite here, and form the river Roevert. It is the capital of an ancient barony, which comprehends ſeventeen conſiderable villages, and a wood of fir trees, called Maſt-boſch, about 1½ league in length, and half a league in breadth. In 1212, this barony belonged to Godfrey de Bergue, from whom it deſcended to Henry, whoſe daughter Elizabeth married Arnold de Louvain, whoſe only daughter Alix brought the barony of Breda to Raſon de Gavre; from him deſcended Philip, whoſe daughter Alix eſpouſed Gerard de Raſſeghem, who ſold Breda to John III. duke of Brabant, who again ſold it to John de Polane, lord of Leck: this laſt left an only daughter, named Jeanne, married in 1404 to Engelbert de Naſſau, from which alliance this city remained in the houſe of Naſſau till William III. king of England, who, dying without iſſue, the barony was left in abeyance. Henry of Naſſau began the old caſtle in 1350, but about the year 1680, William, prince of Orange, afterwards king of England, erected the new one, which is a magnificent ſquare ſtructure, ſurrounded by the waters of the Mercke. Breda, in ſpirituals, is dependent on the dioceſe of Antwerp; in civil affairs it is governed according to the cuſtoms of Brabant. It ſuffered exceedingly in the wars of the 16th century. In the year 1566, the proteſtants committed many violences: the year following it was annexed to the domains of the king of Spain, by the duke of Alva, on account of the rebellion of William of Naſſau, prince of Orange. In 1575, the emperor Maximilian having offered his mediation for peace, the city of Breda was the place fixed on for the conference, but the Spaniards being too pertinacious in their propoſitions, and diſtruſted by the confederates, the aſſembly was diſſolved without coming to any agreement. In 1577, the garriſon delivered up the city to the ſtates. In 1581, Claude de Berlamont, lord of Hautepenne, took it by ſurpriſe, on the 18th of June, and gave it up to pillage. Prince Maurice made himſelf maſter of it again, in March 1590, by a ſtratagem, ſending a party of choſen men hid in a boat loaded with turf, by whoſe means the prince was admitted, and the city ſurrendered. It was again attacked and taken by Spinola, the 5th of June, 1625, after a ſiege of ſix months, which Juſtin, the natural ſon of William, prince of Orange, ſuſtained with great valour. Spinola burned the turf-boat, by means of which the Dutch had become maſters of the city in 1590, and which had been carefully preſerved in memory of that tranſaction. At length, Frederick Henry, prince of Orange, laid ſiege to it the 23d of June, 1637, and obliged the governor, Omer de Fourdin, to ſurrender the 20th of October following. The Dutch after that conſiderably augmented the fortifications, which are eſteemed ſome of the completeſt in the Netherlands. It is ſurrounded on all ſides by water and moraſſes, which render the approach exceedingly difficult: notwithſtanding which it ſurrendered to the French the 24th of February 1793, after a ſhort ſiege of ten days. On the 30th of March following, it was again ſurrendered to the Dutch by capitulation, the ſoldiers being permitted to return to France with ſafe conduct. In 1667, was held at Breda a celebrated congreſs for peace; firſt between Lewis XIV. king of France, and Charles II. king of England, concluded the 21ſt of July, by the mediation of the king of Sweden; a ſecond peace was concluded at the ſame time, and ſigned on the 31ſt of July, between the king of England and the States General; by an article in which the province of New York was given to the Engliſh. The ſame day a third peace was ratified between the king of England and Frederick III. king of Denmark. The Engliſh ambaſſadors were Denzil Holles, and Henry Coventry; thoſe of France, Godefroi d'Eſtrades, lieutenant general, and Honoré Courtin, counſellor of State; thoſe of Sweden, George Flemmingh, Chriſtophre, comte de Dhona, and Pierre Jules Coyet; the Dutch appointed Jerome van Eeverningk, Pierre de Huybert, Allard Pierre Jongheſtal, Adolphus Henry de Riperda, and Ludolphe Tiarda de Sterckenborgh; and thoſe from Denmark were Paul Klingenbergh, and Pierre Cariſius. The great church is a handſome ſtructure, and remarkable for its tower, which was burned in 1696, and ſince rebuilt, the height of the ſpire is 362 feet; in it are ſeveral monuments of the ancient lords of Breda, the moſt remarkable of which are thoſe of Egelbert I. who died in 1442; of Johr, who died in 1473; and of Engelbert II. who died in 1504; but they are much defaced. The town-houſe is large, the apartments regular, and ſumptuouſly furniſhed. The city is of a triangular form, and contains about 2200 houſes; at every angle is a gate, and trees are planted along the ramparts: 46 miles S. Amſterdam, and 22 SSE. Rotterdam. Long. 22. 14. E. BREMEN, a duchy of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, bounded on the north by the German Ocean and the Elbe, on the eaſt by Holſtein, Luneburg, and Verden, on the ſouth by Verden, Hoya, and Diepholz, and on the weſt by Oldenburg and the German Ocean. The greateſt length about 20 leagues, and the breadth about 17. The whole is a vaſt plain, and almoſt ſurrounded by the Elbe and the Weſer. The lands bordering on the river Elbe afford an extraordinary plenty of grain and fruit ; thoſe on the Oſte are likewiſe exceedingly fertile in grain, and yield alſo a clay for veſſels, together with a free-ſtone ; thoſe along the Weſer, beſides their fertility in grain, produce likewiſe large breeds of cattle. For the preſervation of theſe marſh lands againſt inundations, the dykes and dams are kept in conſtant repair, at a great expence, under the inſpection of dyke-graves, dyke-judges, and jurats. The champain country has in ſome parts good corn land ; the heaths too are covered with ſheep, and the culture of bees is very much attended to. On the moors are dug vaſt quantities of turf, which is exported to Bremen and Hamburg, and uſed in brick-kilns, the glaſs-houſe here, or even for fuel in private houſes. This country likewiſe yields a great deal of flax. The duchy of Bremen was formed out of an archbiſhopric, as this latter was out of a biſhopric, founded by the emperor Charles the Great in 787 (though others ſay in 788) and of which Willehad, an Engliſhman, was the firſt biſhop. On the deceaſe of Leuderichs III. biſhop Anſcarius was tranſlated to Bremen ; and in 858 the ſee itſelf actually incorporated with Hamburg, as the archbiſhopric of the northern nations. The archbiſhops gradually got into their hands the counties within the dioceſe of Bremen, together with the ſovereignty over it. On the death of archbiſhop John Roden, in 1511, the chapter elected only ſuch for their archbiſhops as were of princely families. In 1644, the Swedes made themſelves maſters of Bremen, but at the peace of Weſtphalia, in 1648, returned it as a duchy and fief of the empire. In 1675, the duke of Brunſwick and Luneburg, in conjunction with the biſhop of Munſter and ſome Daniſh forces, overrun this duchy as far as Stade, which laſt place was alſo taken the following year by the Luneburg troops. During the northern war, the Danes in 1712, reduced the duchies of Bremen and Verden ; and in 1715, king Frederick IV. transferred them to the elector of Brunſwick, in lieu of the ſum of 700,000 rix-dollars. In 1719, by the peace of Stockholm, they were ceded by the crown of Sweden for ever to the elector of Brunſwick, together with all their rights and appurtenances ; but for this renunciation the elector of Brunſwick paid Sweden a million of rix-dollars. It was the year 1732, before the elector obtained the emperor's inveſtiture for Bremen and Verden. The elector of Brunſwick, as duke of Bremen, is poſſeſſed, in the college of Princes, of the ſixth ſeat on the bench of temporal princes, and in the diet of Lower Saxony, excluſive of the vote, is alternatively director with Magdeburg. The aſſeſſment of the duchy to a Roman month is 24 horſe, and 100 foot, or 688 florins, which is alſo its contingent to the matricula of the circle ; and to the chamber at Wetzlar it pays 108 rix-dollars, 22½ kreutzers. In the whole duchy are but two cities, and three places enjoying the rights of towns, though it has other large villages which go under that name. The eſtabliſhed religion is Lutheraniſm. In the country are 106 churches, with 123 paſtors, which are divided into one ſuperintendency, under the direction of three præpoſitors, but are not annexed to any particular pariſh. In the towns are five churches, namely, the cathedral at Bremen, having four paſtors; three churches at Stade, under ſix paſtors, and a chaplain to the garriſon ; with one at Buxtehude, having three paſtors. Thus, in the whole duchy, are 111 Lutheran churches, and 137 paſtors. The ſupreme inſpection of churches of this duchy, and the principality of Verden, is veſted in a general ſuperintendent. The Calviniſts in the duchy of Bremen form ſeven congregations, and have a like number of paſtors. Excluſive of the making of cordage and linen, the only manufactures are thoſe of cloth, flannel, kerſeys, and other woollen ſtuffs. The principal rivers, beſides the Elbe and the Weſer, are the Oſte, the Schwinge, the Aue, the Luhe, and the Lehe.

BREMEN, an imperial city of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and capital of a duchy of the ſame name. This city lies on the Weſer, by which it is divided into the Old and New. Both theſe are joined by a large bridge, and another ſmall one over a little branch of the ſame river. Its fortifications are pretty good. In 1744, all the buildings and inhabitants here were numbered, and in the Old and New town (excluſive of the ſuburbs) were counted 4,778 inhabited houſes, and 10,223 inhabitants, beſides children and ſervants. The Old town, which is the largeſt and moſt populous, is divided into four pariſhes or quarters. In this part alſo ſtands the cathedral. This church is frequented by the Lutherans, and under it's choir is the Bleykeller, or lead cellar, remarkable for undecayed corpſes. The calviniſt is the eſtabliſhed religion, the whole body of the corporation being of that perſuaſion ; though the number of Lutherans is thought to equal the calviniſts. The corporation is compoſed of 4 burghermaſters, and 24 counſellors, or aldermen ; the garriſon conſiſts of about 600 men. Here are ſeveral manufactures, excluſive of a very conſiderable trade, and Bremen ſtill bears the title of a Hanſe town. This city was anciently the ſee of the biſhopric, and afterwards of the archbiſhopric of that name ; but, ſo early as the thirteenth century, frequent diſputes aroſe between it and the biſhops and chapter. In 1640, Bremen was ſummoned to the diet, and allowed a ſeat and vote on the Rheniſh bench, in the college of Imperial cities, where it ranks the eighth. In 1648, at the peace of Weſtphalia, both the city, its dependences, and vaſſals, were confirmed in their ſtate, freedom, rights, and privileges, as well eccleſiaſtical as civil. In 1757, the French got poſſeſſion of the city, but in 1758, haſtily quitted it, and were ſucceeded by a body of Hanoverians. Its matricular aſſeſſment is 320 florins, and its contingent to the chamber at Wetzlar 148 rix-dollars, 67½ kruitzers : 54 miles SW. Hamburg. Long. 26. 6. E. Ferro. Lat. 53. 6. N.

BRENTFORD, a town of England, in the county of Middleſex, ſituated on the north ſide of the river Thames, ſo called from the river Brent, which croſſes it at the weſt end. It is a place of great trade, which is much aſſiſted by the vicinity of the river : market-boats go every tide to London. The buſineſs of diſtilling is very large, as well as brickmaking, malting, and mealing. Members of Parliament for the county of Middleſex are elected in this town. In the year 1016, Edmond Ironſide attacked and defeated the Danes under Canute, and compelled them to fly to Staines ; and in the year 1642, Charles I. after the battle of Edgehill, drove two regiments of the enemy from hence, with the loſs of their general and 500 men. The market is held on Tueſdays for corn and proviſions. Near it is Sion Houſe, formerly a celebrated nunnery ; one of the firſt ſuppreſſed by Henry VIII. whoſe revenues amounted to 1944l. 12s. a year. The ſeat was afterwards granted by Edward VI. to his uncle, the duke of Somerſet. It is now the ſeat of the duke of Northumberland : 7 miles W. London.

BRESCIA, a city of Italy, and capital of the Breſſan, is ſituated in a beautiful plain on the river Garza ; the rivers Mela and Navilo likewiſe paſſing near it : it was built by Brennus, after which it became a Roman colony. It ſuffered exceedingly during the revolutions of Italy, and it is obſerved, that in the courſe of 28 years it charged maſters ſeven times. The inhabitants are induſtrious, and carry on ſeveral flouriſhing manufactures. The fire arms made here are particularly celebrated. The public palace is remarkable for the beauty of the architecture, and the paintings in freſco ; it was built with part of the ruins of a temple of Vulcan. In the cathedral is ſhewn the ſtandard of Conſtantine ; this and ſeveral of the churches, are adorned with beautiful ſtatues and paintings. The magiſtracy conſiſts of 600 citizens, which are divided into many inferior councils, with a noble Venetian, who preſides in quality of governor, or podeſtat. It is the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Milan : and contains 11 pariſh churches, and 30 convents, and above 50,000 inhabitants : 32 miles NW. Mantua, and 43 E. Milan. Long. 27. 45. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 30. N.—This city was taken by the French, under Buonaparte, in the year 1796. The country of Breſſan is now united in the Ciſalpine Republic.

The form is a long ſquare, about 25 miles long, and 16 broad. The country is very flat and level, and the parts near the rivers ſwampy. The country in general produces excellent corn and madder, and feeds a great number of large cow cattle. On the diviſion of Sileſia among the ſons of Wladiſlau II. king of Poland, Breſlau came to Boleſlaus Altus ; on a diſpute among his ſucceſſors, one of them implored the aſſiſtance of John, King of Bohemia, and promiſed him the ſucceſſion if he died without heirs ; John ſucceeded, and in 1337 granted the government of the country to the city of Breſlau, and in 1505 Wladiſlau transferred the judicature of the whole principality to the ſame, and the firſt magiſtrate was governor till the year 1635, when the emperor, Ferdinand III. obliged the city to ſurrender up the government and judicature, with all other rights, and reſerved the diſpoſal of all offices to himſelf. In which ſtate it continued till it was united to Pruſſia. The principal towns are Breſlau, Neumarkt, Canth, Namſlau, and Reichtal. The principal rivers are the Oder, the Loh, the Ohlau, and the Schweidnitz.

BRESLAU, the capital of a principality to which it gives name, and all the duchy of Sileſia, ſituated on the ſouth ſide of the Oder, with the Ohlau running through it. The town was deſtroyed by the Tartars in the year 1241, and rebuilt where it now ſtands. It was ſurrounded with walls in 1529. Taking the whole of the town, New and Old, with the fauxbourgs, it is ſaid to be two German miles in length. The Roman Catholics have ſeveral churches and convents. The Lutherans have ſeven churches within the walls, and two without. It holds the third rank among the Pruſſian cities, that is to ſay, next to Berlin and Konigſberg. The magiſtracy is Lutheran, and conſiſts of a town court and a council : its conſiſtory likewiſe is Lutheran. This city is at preſent the centre of all the trade of Sileſia, and carries on divers manufactures. It was in the year 1741, that it fell under the Pruſſian government. In 1757, a ſmall Pruſſian army, under the command of duke Auguſtus William of Brunſwick Bevern, fortified itſelf in this neighbourhood, and being attacked on the 22d of November by the Auſtrian forces, made a moſt vigorous reſiſtance till evening, but in the night quitted their camp, and again croſſed the Oder, on which the city ſurrendered to the Auſtrians. On the 20th of December, however, it was retaken by the king of Pruſſia, and the Auſtrian garriſon, which amounted to near 18,000 men, made priſoners of war. In the laſt ſiege divers of its churches were damaged, and St. Mary Magdalen's library demoliſhed by the falling of a bomb. The greateſt part likewiſe of the ſuburbs ſuffered extremely, and part entirely burnt down : 126 miles E. Dreſden. Long. 34. 55. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. N.

Briançonnet, a fortreſs of Savoy, in the Tarentaiſe, near the town of Mouſtiers; ſituated on a rock inacceſſible every way except by the ſide of a river, where it is aſcended by two or three hundred ſteps. It was taken in the reign of Henry IV. by the duke of Leſdiguires. The common paſſage from Savoy to the Tarentaiſe and Italy is by this fortreſs.

Briançonnois, before the revolution, a country of France, in Dauphiny, about 12 leagues long, and 6 wide, ſituated among the Alps. The air is cold in winter, and warm in ſummer. The inhabitants are ſober, active, and induſtrious, they cultivate ſome wheat and fruit, and feed numbers of ſheep: they gather manna from the trees, and make ſome wine. They were known to the Romans under the name of Brigantines. It now forms ſome part of the department of the Lower Alps.

BRIANSK, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Orlov, on the Deſna: 60 miles WNW. Orel, and 440 SSE. Peterſburg.

BRIANZA, mountains of Italy, near the lake of Como, in the Milaneſe.

BRIARE, a town of France, in the department of the Loiret, ſituated on the Loire, and containing about 1000 inhabitants, celebrated for a canal, which from hence forms a communication between the Loire and the Seine: 2 leagues SE. Gien.

BRIASCA, a town of European Turkey, in Moldavia: 76 miles E. Jaſſi.

BRIATEXTE, a town of France in the department of the Tarn, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Lavaur: 1½ league NE. Lavaur.

BRIDGE HAMPTON, a town of United America, in the ſtate of New York: ſituated in Long Iſland.

BRIDGE TOWN, a town of United America, and capital of the county of Cumberland, in the ſtate of New Jerſey: 25 miles S. Philadelphia.

BRIDGE TOWN, the capital of Barbadoes, in the Weſt Indies, lying in the ſouth-weſt part of the iſland, and in the pariſh of St. Michael. It is ſituated on the innermoſt part of Carliſle bay, which is large enough to contain five hundred ſhips, being a league and a half in breadth, and a league in depth; but the bottom is foul, and apt to cut the cables. The neighbouring grounds being low flats, were often overflowed by the ſpring-tides, and are moſt of them ſince drained. The town lies at the entrance of St. George's-valley, which runs ſeveral miles into the country. It ſuffered greatly by fire on Feb. 8th. 1756, May 14th, 1766, and Dec. 27th, 1767, when the greateſt part of the town was deſtroyed; before which time it had about 1500 houſes, moſtly brick, very elegant, and ſaid to be the fineſt and largeſt in all the Caribbee Iſlands, the greateſt part of which have been rebuilt. It has a college, founded liberally, and endowed by Colonel Codrington. Here are commodious wharfs for loading and unloading goods, with ſome forts and caſtles for its defence; but the town is ſubject to hurricanes. On the eaſt ſide of the town is a ſmall fort of eight guns, where the magazines of powder and ſtores are kept by a ſtrong guard. The number of militia for this town and St. Michael's precinct is 1200 men. This is the ſeat of the governor, council, aſſembly, and court of chancery. Long. 58. 38. W. Greenwich. Lat. 13. 10. N.

BRIDGEND, a town of South Wales, in the county of Glamorgan, ſituated on the river Ogmore. The ſoil near it is exceedingly fertile and well cultivated. A woollen manufacture is ſet on foot, under the patronage and protection of the ſociety inſtituted for the promotion of agriculture, manufactures, &c. It has a good weekly market on Saturdays. The town is populous, and in a ſtate of improvement: 20 miles W. Cardiff, and 181 W. London.

BRIDGENORTH, a town of England, in the county of Salop, ſituated on the Severn, firſt built by Ethelfeda, lady of the Mercians. It is a large market and borough town, ſending two members to the Britiſh parliament, and conſiſts of two towns, ſeparated by the Severn, but united by a ſtone bridge of eight arches, with a gate. The Upper town is ſituated on a hill, or rock of red ſand, in which the cellars and many mean houſes are hewn. It has been walled, and two of the gates remain at the ends of the High-ſtreet. The part without South gate belonged to the caſtle, which was more in compaſs than the third of the town. Within its precincts was the collegiate church of St. Mary Magdalen, called the Low Church, which being the magazine for the garriſon, was ſo much injured in the civil wars that it was obliged to be rebuilt. The royaliſts marched hither from Shrewſbury to meet the parliament's troops: an engagement happened: the former were defeated, and the caſtle demoliſhed. Robert de Beleſme, earl of Shrewſbury walled it round, and truſting to the natural ſtrength of the place, revolted from Henry I. as did afterwards Roger Mortimer from Henry II. but both with ill ſucceſs, being obliged to ſurrender, and make their ſubmiſſion. At the ſiege of this place, Henry II. was aimed at with an arrow, and would have been killed, had not Hubert de St. Clare, a nobleman devoted to the king's intereſts, interpoſing, met both the arrow and death for his prince: 21 miles ESE. Shrewſbury, and 139 NW. London.

BRIDGEWATER, a ſea-port town of England, ſituated near the Briſtol Channel, on the river Parret, in the county of Somerſet. The town contains about 500 houſes, and about 3000 inhabitants. The houſes in general are irregular, but the ſtreets are wide and well paved. It has a large church, and meeting-houſes for the Anabaptiſts and Quakers. The corporation conſiſts of twenty-four capital burgeſſes, including a mayor and two aldermen, whoſe income is very conſiderable. The borough has alſo a recorder, who, with the mayor and aldermen, are empowered to hold four ſeſſions every year, for determining all crimes and miſdemeanours, under capital offences, committed within their juriſdiction. The borough of Bridgewater was formerly the private eſtate of William de Brewere, one of the great barons of king John, by whom a charter was given to the ſaid William de Brewere, for erecting Bridgewater into a free borough, with privileges to his tenants there. This charter is dated at Chinon in France, on the 26th of June 1200. It is a borough town, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. The caſtle here was built in the reign of king John. Here is a quay called the haven; and a ſtone bridge over the river Parret. King Edward II. and Edward III. confirmed its charter of king John. King Edward IV. and queen Elizabeth, or, as ſome ſay Henry IV. granted it others, for changing the bailiff to the mayor, &c. The revenues, which conſiſt of the manor of the borough, the great and ſmall tythes, the manor of Eaſt Stour, in Dorſetſhire, &c. are valued at 5000l. per annum. Its freemen are free in all the ports of England and Ireland, except London and Dublin; and the ſheriff of the county cannot ſend any proceſs into the borough, it having been made a diſtinct county by Henry VIII. It has a ſpacious town-hall, and a high croſs, with a ciſtern over it, to which water is conveyed by an engine from a neighbouring brook, and carried from thence to moſt of the ſtreets. This town was regularly fortified in the civil wars, and ſuſtained more than one ſiege. The ſituation of it renders it eaſy to be fortified, the river and haven forming the greater part of the circumference. The tide riſes, at high water, near ſix fathoms, and ſometimes flows in with ſuch impetuoſity, that it comes two fathoms deep at a time; and when it does ſo, unawares, it often occaſions great damage to ſhips driving foul of each other, and frequently overſetting them. This ſudden rage of the tide is called the Boar, and is frequent in all the rivers of the Channel, eſpecially in the Severn. It is alſo known in the north, particularly in the Trent and the Ouſe, at their entrance into the Humber, at Briſtol, and in ſeveral other places. The manufactures of Mancheſter, Liverpool, Birmingham, &c. for the internal parts of Devon and Cornwall, are brought to this port in large trows, and from hence conveyed in waggons. The duty paid at the cuſtom-houſe on imports, amount to about 2,500l. a year. About forty veſſels from thirty to a hundred tons, are employed in bringing coals from Wales to this place, and from hence the neighbourhood is ſupplied at a moderate rate. The river is navigable for large barges to Taunton and Langport. About ſix miles ſouth of the town, the rivers Tone and Parrot meet. The duke of Monmouth was proclaimed here in the year 1685, and ſoon after defeated in Sedgemoor. The market is weekly, on Thurſday, for cattle, cheeſe, corn, and proviſions: 44 miles SW. Briſtol, 11 NNE. Taunton, and 137 W. London.

BRIDLINGTON, or Burlington, a ſea-port town of England, in the eaſt riding of the county of York, ſituated on a bay in the German Ocean, with a good tide haven. It is ſituated nearly in the meridian of London. Lat. 54. 7. N.

BRIDPORT, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Dorſet, with a harbour in the Engliſh Channel, capable of containing about forty ſail of ſmall veſſels; ſituated at the mouth of the Brit. The trade of the town is principally in twine, hats, and ſail-cloth. It is a corporation and a borough town, ſending two members to the Britiſh parliament: the ſituation of the town is low. It was firſt incorporated by Henry VII. afterwards by Queen Elizabeth, James the Firſt, and Charles II. The quarter ſeſſions for the county are held here once a year. In the year 1722, an act of parliament was paſſed to repair the harbour and piers of Bridport, which had gone to decay. Saturday is the market day: 15 miles W. Dorcheſter, and 135 W. London. Long. 2. 55. W. Greenwich. Lat 50. 40. N.

BREDY, a town of Aſiatic Turkey, in the Arabian Irak: 140 miles NW. Baſſora.

BRIE, before the revolution, a country of France, which was ſituated partly in Champagne, and partly in the Iſle of France, and called from its particular ſituation Brie Champenoiſe, and Brie-Françoiſe, or Brie Parſienne. The principal towns were Meaux, Provins, and Chateau Thierry.

BRIE COMTE ROBERT, a town of France, in the department of the Seine and Marne, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Melun, founded by Robert, count of Dreux: 3½ poſts SE. Paris.

BRIEC, a town of France, in the department of Finiſterre, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Quimper: 2½ leagues NNE. Quimper, and 2 SSE. Chateaulin.

BRIEG, a principality of Sileſia, bounded on the north by the principality of Oels, on the north-eaſt by the principality of Ratibor, on the eaſt by the principality of Oppeln, on the ſouth by the principality of Nieſſe and Munſterburg, on the weſt by the principality of Schweidnitz, and on the north-weſt by the principality of Breſlau; its form is irregular, about 36 miles in length, and from 8 to 21 in breadth. The country is fertile in corn, madder, and tobacco. The firſt prince was Boleſlaus III. One of his ſucceſſors embraced the Lutheran religion in 1523, and in 1537 concluded a treaty of fraternity and ſucceſſion with Joachim II. elector of Brandenburg: and on this was founded the claims of Frederick II. king of Pruſſia: the principal towns are Brieg, Ohlau, Lowen, Michelau, Strehlen, Nimtſch, and Warſen; the principal rivers are the Oder and the Ohlau.

BRIEG, a city of Sileſia, capital of the principality to which it gives name. It is well fortified, and contains four ſuburbs, with ſeveral churches for Roman Catholics and Proteſtants. Here is a manufacture of cloth. In the year 1643, it held out a ſiege againſt the Swedes, but in 1741, the Pruſſians made themſelves maſters of it in four days; the caſtle which was once the reſidence of the duke of Brieg, was burnt down during the ſiege of the city in 1741: 10 miles S. Grottgau, and 22 SE. Breſlau. Long. 35. 23. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 52. N.

BRIEG, or Brigg, a town of Swiſſerland, and capital of a dixain, or commonwealth, in the Valais. The country about affords excellent paſtures: about a ſhort league from the town are ſome warm medicinal baths, ſaid to be ſerviceable in rheumatiſm and eruptions of the ſkin, but are not much frequented: 28 miles E. Sion.

BRIEL, or Brill, a ſea-port town of Holland, ſituated at the mouth of the Meuſe, on the north ſide of the Iſle of Voorn, with a good harbour: it formerly was conſidered as part of the province of Zealand, but is now reckoned one of the cities of Holland, among which it holds a fifth rank. Its magiſtracy is compoſed of two burgomaſters, ſeven echevins, and a large council of twenty. In the year 1572, the confederates of the United Provinces laid here the foundation of their republic, rather by accident than deſign; for, being chaſed from the Low Countries by the duke of Alva, they retired to England, and having haſtily equipped a ſmall fleet of forty ſail, under the conduct of William Marck, comte de Lumay, and William de Trelong, they ſailed towards this coaſt, being called in deriſion the Beggars of the Sea, and Geeſe of the Sea. The duke complaining to queen Elizabeth that they were pirates, ſhe obliged them to depart from England, and they ſet ſail for Enckhuyſen, in which voyage they took three rich ſhips belonging to Antwerp, and another from Biſcay. As the wind was unfavourable, they accidentally ſteered to the Iſle of Voorn, attacked the town of Briel, and the inhabitants not being in a ſtate capable of reſiſtance, made themſelves maſter of the place on the firſt of April, which they afterwards fortified, and made the firſt aſylum of their liberty. In this town was born the celebrated Martin Harpertz Tromp, admiral of Holland, who, after being in fifty engagements, in which he held the chief command, was unfortunately killed by a muſquet ſhot, in an engagement with the Engliſh fleet, commanded by Admiral Blake, near the Texel, on the 8th of Auguſt 1653; after whoſe death the Dutch were totally defeated; the States General had him interred in the Temple at Delft, and cauſed many medals to be ſtruck in honour of this great man; his ſon, Cornelius Tromp, who was the lieutenant admiral general of the republic, and well ſupported the valour and reputation of his father, died in 1691: 8 leagues W. from Dort. Long. 21. 36. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 51. N.

BRIENNE, a town of France, in the department of the Aude, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Bar-ſur-Aube: 4 leagues NW. Bar-ſur-Aube, and 6 ENE. Troyes.

BRIGHTELMSTONE, or Brighton, a town of England, on the coaſt of Suſſex, at the bottom of a bay formed by Beachy Head and Worthing Point, in the Engliſh Channel, one of the moſt faſhionable places of reſort for ſea-bathing in the kingdom. It has no harbour, but veſſels of 150 tons can lie cloſe to the ſhore to unload in calm weather. In the road, about a mile from the coaſt, there is good anchorage for veſſels of any ſize; where with good cables they are able to ſtand the rougheſt ſeas. The ſea has made great encroachments on the town at different times, and great pains have been taken, and great ſums laid out to ſecure it by means of piles of timber, &c. from farther damage. The number of inhabitants is computed at 6000, independant of the numerous viſitors during the ſummer. There are two aſſembly-rooms, public libraries, and a theatre. It is no corporation. The principal market-day is on Thurſday, but the market is open, and ſtocked on every day except Sunday. Near 100 boats are employed in fiſhing, which carry three, four, or five men each; the ſale of mackrels and herrings are ſaid ſome years to have produced 10,000l. In time of peace, a packet ſails every week, if the wind and weather will permit, to Dieppe. Veſſels may be had at a ſhort notice for any other part of France: 32 miles E. Chicheſter, 8 S. BRISTOL, a city and ſeaport of England, ſituated in the counties of Glouceſter and Somerſet, on the rivers Avon and Frome, which unite here, and form one ſtream under the name of the former, navigable for large and heavy ſhips, till it joins the Severn at King Road, there known by the name of The Briſtol Channel. It was called by the Britons, as we are told, Caer Oder nant Badon, i. e. the City Oder in Badon Valley. The Saxons called it Brightſtowe or Briſtowe. The merchants of this city trade with more independence on London than any other town in the kingdom. Their Weſt India ſhips ſail and arrive in fleets. They trade largely with Ireland, Holland, Hamburgh, Norway, Sweden, Ruſſia, and America. They ſend ſhips to Newfoundland and the Mediterranean. The quay is eſteemed one of the fineſt in Europe, and on the banks of the river are ſeveral dock-yards for building and repairing the ſhips. Buſineſs of almoſt all kinds is carried on here, and capital works eſtabliſhed, ſuch as large braſs works, forges for ſmelting copper; iron founderies, where cannon, &c. are caſt and bored; lead-works, in which the lead is ſmelted from the ore, caſt into ſheets, milled, &c.: manufactures of white and red lead, and lead ſhot; a great number of ſugar-houſes, turpentine, ſulphur, and vitriol works; a manufacture of china, beſides manufactures of woollen ſtuffs, broad-cloth, ſail-cloth, lace, ſilk, and cotton. Among the public buildings, we may reckon the Exchange in Cornſtreet; other public buildings are the Council-Houſe, Guild-Hall, Cuſtom-Houſe, ſeveral halls of companies, as of merchants, coopers, and merchant-taylors, public library, infirmary, &c. Briſtol was erected into a biſhopric by Henry VIII. It contains ſeventeen pariſhes, and, beſides the cathedral, ſeventeen churches and five chapels within the city, and two churches and one chapel in the ſuburbs; in all, twenty-ſix of the eſtabliſhed religion, and fifteen places of worſhip for other perſuaſions. The hoſpitals and charitable foundations are more than twenty. The number of houſes in the city is 13,000, and of the inhabitants 72,000, and if to theſe we add the population of the ſuburbs, the whole muſt exceed 100,000. The government of the city is adminiſtered by a mayor, twelve aldermen, two ſheriffs, twenty-eight common-council, a recorder, town clerk, &c. Briſtol being a county of itſelf, one of the judges comes every year to Briſtol and holds an aſſize; in the autumn, another aſſize is held by the mayor, recorder, and aldermen. Queen Elizabeth granted a charter, whereby every man that marries a daughter of a citizen of Briſtol becomes free of the city. Briſtol was formerly a place of great ſtrength. Geoffrey, biſhop of Conſtance, fortified it when he rebelled againſt William Rufus, but the walls were deſtroyed by the king after he had ſuppreſſed the rebellion. In the year 1140, king Stephen was impriſoned in the caſtle here, by the empreſs Maud, after the battle of Lincoln. In the year 1643, Briſtol was garriſoned by the parliament troops, under the command of Colonel Fiennes, who was joined by Waller and his followers, after the battle of Roundway-Down, near Devizes. Prince Rupert attacked it, and though the town and caſtle were well fortified, and in want of neither men, proviſion, or warlike ſtores, it was taken by capitulation; but not before a great number of brave men and officers had loſt their lives. The hot-well is about a mile and a half weſt from the city, cloſe by the Avon, in the county of Glouceſter, at the bottom of ſtupendous rocks, called St. Vincent's Rock, out of which the ſpring riſes, and is defended by a thick wall, to prevent its being injured by the tide. The water is ſaid to be impregnated by the limeſtone quarries, with a ſoft alcalious quality, with ſome weak impregnation of ſulphur, with nitre, or ſea-ſalt, and perhaps ſlightly with iron. They are of an agreeable, not ſickly warmth; are excellent in hectics, diabetes, weak lungs, preternatural evacuations, acrid juices, and viſcid blood; and in the firſt ſtage of a phthiſis pulmonum: 120 miles W. London. Long. 2. 35. W. Greenwich. Lat. 51. 28. N.

BRISTOL, a ſea-port town of United America, in the ſtate of Rhode Iſland, ſituated on the continent. It was conſiderably damaged by the Britiſh troops in the war, but the damages have been repaired. It is now a place of conſiderable trade to the other ſtates, to Africa, and the Weſt Indies. The number of inhabitants, in the year 1790, was 1406: 15 miles N. Newport, and 42 S. Boſton. Long. 71. 12. W. Greenwich. Lat. 41. 35. N.

BRISTOL CHANNEL, that part of the Atlantic Ocean which lies between the ſouth coaſt of Wales and the counties of Somerſet, Devon, and Cornwall, in England.

BRIT, a river of England, which runs into the ſea, 2 miles S. Bridport, in Dorſetſhire.

BRITAIN (Great). The iſland which is now called Great Britain, and comprehends the two kingdoms of England and Scotland, with the principality of Wales, was, in more ancient times, by way of diſtinction, ſtiled Albion, the name of Britain being then common to all the iſlands that lie round it. Whence it had the name of Albion is uncertain, but that it received the name of Britain from foreigners is evident, ſince the natives never ſtyled themſelves Britons, nor their country Britain, their true name being Cumri or Cumbri, whence Cambria, the name of Wales to this day among the Welſh. Britain lies over againſt France and Germany, in a triangular form, having three promontories, ſhooting out three different ways, viz. the Land's End towards the weſt, the Kentiſh or North Foreland towards the eaſt, and Caithneſs towards the north. It is divided from Ireland to the weſt by the Iriſh Sea, on the north it is bounded by the Northern Ocean, on the eaſt where it faces Germany, by the German Ocean; and on the ſouth, towards France, by the Britiſh Channel. Its length from north to ſouth is about 560 miles; its breadth is various, and in compaſs its three ſides are found to contain, allowing for the windings of the coaſt, about 1800 miles. The ſouth ſide, extending from the North Foreland in Kent, to the Land's End in Cornwall, contains about 300 miles; the weſt ſide, from the Land's End, to the moſt northern point of Scotland, about 800; and the eaſt ſide about 700. If Great Britain be conſidered as a perfect triangle, formed by three right lines, the length of its three ſides put together, would amount to about 1500 miles. The fertility and pleaſantneſs of Britain gave occaſion to imagine that theſe were the Fortunate Iſlands, deſcribed by the poets, where the face of nature ſmiled with a perpetual ſpring. It was in former times the granary of the weſtern empire, for hence was every year tranſported an immenſe quantity of corn, for the ſupply of the army on the frontiers of Germany. The ſouthern parts of Britain were peopled, according to Cæſar, by the Gauls. Tacitus is of the ſame opinion: if we conſider all circumſtances, ſays he, it is probable, that Gaul firſt peopled Britain, which lies ſo near it. This opinion, which is followed by moſt of the ancient, as well as the modern writers, is chiefly founded on the agreement obſerved by the Roman writers between the two nations in their cuſtoms, manners, language, religion, form of government, way of fighting, &c. Beſides, as the Gauls ſent colonies into Italy, Spain, Germany, Thrace, and Aſia, it is but reaſonable to conclude, that they did the ſame, with reſpect to Britain, which lay ſo near them, that they could diſcern it from the continent, and was no leſs plentiful than the other countries where they ſettled. To return to the Britons: their manners, cuſtoms, religion, form of government, &c. are deſcribed not only by Cæſar in his Commentaries, but by others, and perhaps more fully, who wrote after the Romans were become maſters of the iſland. The country was, according to Cæſar, well peopled, and ſtocked with cattle. Their houſes were not unlike thoſe of the Gauls. They uſed copper or iron plates, weighed by a certain ſtandard, inſtead of money. If they bred domeſtic fowls, hens, or geeſe, it was for their diverſion, being ſtrictly forbidden by their religion to eat them. Of all the Britons, thoſe who inhabited Cantium, or Kent, were the moſt civilized, not differing much in their manners from the Gauls. The more inland people, for the moſt part, ſowed no corn, their uſual food being milk and game, with which their woods and plains were well ſtored. The uſe of cloaths was ſcarce known in the iſland. Only the inhabitants of the ſouthern coaſt covered their nakedneſs with ſkins of wild beaſts, careleſsly thrown over them, not ſo much to defend themſelves againſt the cold, as to avoid giving offence to the ſtrangers, who came to trade with them. All the Britons painted their bodies with the juice of woad, of a ſky colour, and wore long hair, but ſhaved the reſt of their bodies, except their upper lip. One cuſtom prevailed among them, which ſeemed deteſtable to other nations, which was for ten or twelve men, brothers or friends, to have wives in common. They abſtained from all manner of fiſh, though the ſeas that ſurrounded their iſland, and their rivers were plentifully ſtored with them. Their towns, or rather villages, were a confuſed parcel of huts, placed at a ſmall diſtance from each other, and, generally ſpeaking, in the middle of a wood, whereof the avenues were defended with ſlight ramparts of earth, or with the trees that were cut down to clear the ground. As to their manner of fighting, Cæſar who extols their valour, and the undaunted bravery with which they went to battle, tells us, that they made uſe of chariots, driving furiouſly among the enemy's ranks, and diſcharging their darts, by which means they often put the Romans in diſorder. When they engaged the horſe, they left their chariots to fight on foot, their charioteers in the mean time retiring, and placing themſelves ſo that their maſters, if overpowered with numbers, might readily find them, and have an eaſy retreat. By this manner of fighting, they had, ſays Cæſar, both the ſpeed of the horſe, and the ſteadineſs of the foot, and were by daily practice ſo expert, that they could ſtop their horſes on a ſteep deſcent, though in full career, turn them in a narrow compaſs, run along the pole, ſit upon the yoke, and from thence, with incredible quickneſs, return to their chariots. Thus Cæſar. But why they choſe to engage the horſe rather on foot than in their chariots, is not eaſily conceived. Their trade was very inconſiderable, notwithſtanding the convenient ſituation of their iſland for carrying on an extenſive commerce. Their veſſels were very ſmall, with their keels and ribs made of ſlight timber, interwoven with wicker, and covered with hides, which ſhews that they undertook no long voyages, nay, in all likelihood, they never ventured to ſea beyond the coaſts of Gaul. Their chief traffic was with the Phænician merchants, who after the diſcovery of the iſland, which happened, probably, before the Trojan war, yearly exported great quantities of tin, which they ſold to the Greeks and other diſtant nations. The care and directions of all religious matters were, by the Britons as well as the Gauls, committed to the Druids, whoſe authority was great, not only in religious but civil affairs. They were held, both by the Britons and Gauls, in ſuch veneration, that their authority was almoſt abſolute. To them belonged the care of private and public ſacrifices, the interpretation of religion, the beſtowing of rewards, or inflicting of puniſhments, the deciding of controverſies, let the difference be of what nature ſoever, and whoever refuſed to obey their decree, whether lord or vaſſal, was excluded from the ſacrifices, which was accounted the greateſt puniſhment that could be inflicted. The ſame form of government prevailed in Britain as in Gaul; that is, the whole country was divided into ſeveral ſmall ſtates, with a head over each, dignified by authors with the name of king. Of theſe heads, or kings, Cæſar mentions four in the ſmall compaſs of Kent. Whether theſe ſtates were hereditary or elective, we find no where recorded. Long. 12. to 19. 16. E. What Dampier and Roggeween thought was only one iſland, captain Carteret has ſince found divided into two, by a narrow channel, which he ſailed through, from ſouth-eaſt to north-weſt, and gave the name of New Ireland to the moſt northern. The coaſts of New Britain are high and mountainous, covered here and there with wood. The inhabitants were of a dark copper colour, well made, and hardy; near the ſouthern coaſt are a number of ſmaller iſlands, among which is one with a volcano. Long. 148. 5. to 148. 55. E. BRUGES. Among the cities of Flanders, Bruges holds the ſecond rank; is about a league and a half in circumference, and advantageouſly ſituated in a plain, having, by means of canals, a navigable communication with Ghent, Oſtend, Dunkirk, Nieuport, Furnes, Damme, Sluys, &c. This city was, in the fourteenth century, a place of the greateſt trade in Europe; in it were conſuls for the regulation of trade from all the different cities and countries; and national warehouſes and magazines to depoſit their goods, which were brought here as the great mart: the merchants of Venice ſent hither the product of the eaſt; the traders of the north brought hither the production of the Baltic, and the Engliſh ſent their wool; the dukes of Burgundy, their lords, encouraged trade, and under their auſpices they flouriſhed; but in the year 1489, the citizens had the audacity to arreſt the Archduke Maximilian, who had married Mary, the heireſs of the houſe of Burgundy, to affront his domeſtics, and maltreat his officers; they even demanded aſſiſtance from the king of France and the duke of Gueldres; this tumult continued fourteen months, but being fearful of much worſe conſequences, they implored the clemency of their prince; fifty-ſix were condemned to death, a great number baniſhed, and the city fined in a large ſum. From that time, Bruges began to decline, and Antwerp ſo advantageouſly ſituated on the banks of a conſiderable river, became its rival, and ſoon its ſuperior. Having a communication with the ſea from Oſtend, by means of a navigable canal, it is yet a place of conſiderable trade, with manufactures of ſtuff, linen, &c. It was formerly in the dioceſe of Tournay, but was in the year 1559, erected into a biſhopric, by Philip II. king of Spain, ſubject to the archbiſhop of Malines. In 1430, Philip the Good, duke of Burgundy, inſtituted the order of the Golden Fleece at Bruges. The ſtreets, 260 in number, are in general ſpacious, and the houſes large, but old; there are ſeven gates and ſix grand markets, but they have neither fountain or river, the water which ſupplies the city being brought from Ghent, from the rivers Lis and Scheldt, by means of pipes. The principal buildings are the townhouſe, the halls, the mint, &c. At the end of the grand market is a fine ſteeple, one of the moſt beautiful of the kind in Europe, five hundred and thirty-three ſteps in height, and furniſhed with bells and chimes, which play a different tune every quarter of an hour. There are ſeveral fine churches at Bruges; the cathedral is dedicated to St. Donat, but the church of Notre Dame is the moſt beautiful, whoſe ſteeple is a ſea mark to ſailors coming to Oſtend; in the treaſury are preſerved the rich veſtments of Thomas-à-Becket adorned with precious ſtones. Seventeen houſes or palaces yet remain, the ancient habitations of ſo many conſuls of trade. The magiſtracy of Bruges is compoſed of two burgomaſters, twelve echevins, twelve counſellors, ſix penſionaries, and two greffiers. This city was bombarded by the Dutch, on the 4th of July, 1704, but without ſucceſs; it ſubmitted to the allies in 1706, after the battle of Ramilies; in 1708, it was inveſted by the French, under the command of comté de la Motthe, and ſurrendered the 5th of July. The allies re-entered it the beginning of the year 1709, in virtue of a capitulation ſigned on the taking of Ghent, the 30th of December, 1709. The magiſtrates opened the gates to the French troops, and ſigned a formal ſubmiſſion to the French republic, on the 24th of June, 1794: 21 miles W. Ghent, and 12 E. Oſtend. Long. 20. 47. E. BRUNN, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 8 miles W. Ebenfurth.

BRUNN, or Brno, or Brinn, a city, the capital of a circle to which it gives name: the ſecond town in rank, and firſt in commerce, of the marquiſate of Moravia, ſituated at the conflux of the rivers Schwartſchaw and Surtawa. It is not large, but populous. There are manufactures of cloth, velvets, and pluſh. The diets of the ſtate are held here alternately with Olmuts. It is defended by a ſtrong fortreſs called Spilberg, built on an eminence near the town: the Pruſſians laid ſiege to it in the year 1742, but were compelled to abandon the enterpriſe: 32 miles SW. Olmutz, 100 SE. Prague, and 156 SE. Dreſden.

BRUNN, a circle of Moravia, bounded on the north by Bohemia, on the eaſt by the circle of Olmutz and Hradiſh, on the ſouth by Auſtria, and on the weſt by the circle of Iglau and Znaym. In it are many iron mines and forges, medicinal ſprings, quarries of marble, glaſs-houſes, and alum-works. It is ſaid to contain 70 towns, and above 20,871 houſes. Brunn is the capital.

BRUNSTATT, a town of France, in the department of the Upper Rhine, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Altkirch: 7 miles N. Altkirch.

BRUNSWICK, a country of Germany in the circle of Lower Saxony, with the title of duchy; bounded on the north by Luneburg, on the eaſt by Magdeburg, Halberſtadt, and Anhalt, on the ſouth by Thuringia and Heſſe, and on the weſt by Minden, Hoya, and Lippe; Brunſwick is the capital. Authors include likewiſe under the name of Brunſwick all that the princes of this houſe poſſeſs in Lower Saxony, where they form different branches; ſuch are the duchies and territories of Luneburg, Gottinghen, Grubenhagen, Calenberg, Wolfenbuttel, Hanover, Zell, Ultzen, Danneberg, Marpurg, Giffhorn, Eimbech, and Hamelen. The country is good and fertile; there are many mines, plenty of game, and abundance of corn: the principal rivers are the Weſer, Ocker, Leyne, Ilmenau, and Viper: there are a number of medicinal ſprings, large foreſts, and plenty of all the neceſſaries of life: commerce and manufactures were once flouriſhing, but the German wars of the 17th century produced a great change; and this country ſuffered as much as any other part of the empire.

BRUNSWICK, a city of Germany, and capital of the duchy of the ſame name, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and reſidence of the prince of Brunſwick-Wolfenbuttel, is ſituated on the Ocker; ſaid to have been built in the year 868 by Bruno, ſon of Adolphus, duke of Saxony; ſince that greatly enlarged by Henry the Fowler, and divers other princes. The form is nearly ſquare, and meaſures two miles in circumference; it contains five or ſix ſquares, and a number of handſome buildings, among which are the town houſe, and ſeveral churches, all for Proteſtants; the inhabitants of this town being among the firſt who embraced the doctrine of Luther. There are, beſides, a college for the ſtudy of arts and ſciences, which has a well furniſhed library; an opera houſe; a theatre; and a cuſtom houſe. Brunſwick was formerly one of the Hanſe towns, and governed as a republic, aſſerting that they had purchaſed their freedom from the dukes of Brunſwick; who ſeveral times with arms diſputed this pretenſion. In the years 1542, 1550, and 1553, Henry the Young beſieged the town, which ſuffered very conſiderably, but, being ſuccoured by ſome troops of their allies, the people preſerved their liberty: in 1569, an accommodation took place; but in 1617, Frederic Ulric compelled them to pay him homage; and in 1670, Rodolphus Auguſtus took poſſeſſion of the town, and it is ſaid, by means of cannon which he had borrowed of the inhabitants for another purpoſe; and afterwards built a citadel to ſecure its ſubjection. The town is populous, but not ſo much ſo as it was when a free town; for the numerous garriſon placed there by the duke drove away a great number of the tradeſmen, and injured its commerce. The firſt ſpinning wheels are ſaid to have been invented in this place by a ſtatuary of the name of Jurgen: the ſtrong beer, or mum, ſo called from the inventor, or brewer, Chriſtian Mummen, is exported to many parts of the world. In the year 1757, the French took Brunſwick, but evacuated it the year following; and in 1761, attempted to take it again, but without ſucceſs: 7 miles N. Wolfenbuttel, and 47 WNW. Magdeburg. Long. 28. 9. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 10. N.

BRUNSWICK (New), a government or diviſion of Nova Scotia, lying on the north-weſt of the Bay of Fundy; bounded on the ſouth by the American ſtates, on the weſt and north by Canada, and on the eaſt by the Gulf of St. Lawrence. St. John's river croſſes it in the centre from north-weſt to ſouth-eaſt. Frederick Town is the capital.

BRUNSWICK, a city of United America, in the ſtate of New Jerſey, ſituated on the ſouth-weſt ſide of the Rariton, with a port for ſmall veſſels; the inhabitants carry on a conſiderable trade. The number of inhabitants about 2,000, half of which are Dutch or of Dutch extraction: 45 miles NE. Philadelphia, and 25 SW. New York. Long. 74. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 40. 29 N.

BRUNSWICK, a town of America, in the country of Maine: 102 miles NE. Boſton. Long. 69. 58. W. Greenwich. Lat. 43. 50. N

BRUSQUET (Le), a town of France, in the department of the Lower Alps, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Digne: 5 miles NNE. Digne.

BRUSSELS, or Bruxelles, called the ornament and delight of the Netherlands, the richeſt and gayeſt city of Brabant, heretofore the reſidence of the court, is built in a fertile country, one part of it, to the eaſt, ſituated on an eminence; the other part to the weſt, ſituated in a plain, and well watered by the river Senne, which runs through it, and branches into ſeveral ſtreams, forming many ſmall iſlands; the name is by ſome derived from a neighbouring moraſs, named Broeytſel; by others from a bridge named Bruxel; however that may be, ſo long ago as the year 900, it had a market and a caſtle; and in the year 1340, was ſurrounded with a wall of freeſtone, the ruins of which are yet viſible. Between the years 1357 and 1370, it was conſiderably enlarged, and is now ſaid to be ſeven miles in circumference. Without the walls, are 16 half moons, and a counterſcarp along the foſſe. Bruſſels contains 7 pariſhes, Ste. Gudule, Notre Dame de la Chapelle, St. Geri, St. Nicholas, Ste. Catherine, St. Jaques de Caubergue, and Notre Dame de Finis-terræ. According to the ſaying of Puteanus, a famous hiſtorian of the country, the number ſeven is remarkable at Bruſſels, firſt having ſeven lords at one time, who had each a chateau, whoſe deſcendants form the ſeven patrician families from which the magiſtrates are elected, theſe are the families of Steenweghe, Sleeuws, Serhuyghs, Coudenberg, Serroelofs, Sweerts, and Rodenbeeck; there are ſeven grand places or markets, beſides others leſs conſiderable: ſeven gates, that of Louvain to the eaſt, that of Namur to the ſouth, thoſe of Halle and Anderlecht to the weſt, thoſe of Flanders and Laecken to the north, and that of Scharebeeck, otherwiſe called the gate of Cologn, to the north-eaſt. Without the gate of Halle, about 200 paces, is a Fort called fort de Monterey, being built by comte de Monterey, governor general of the Netherlands, in 1672. From Bruſſels a canal is cut to the river Rupple, a little beyond the village of Willebroeck, by means of which there is a daily communication in barges with Antwerp; this canal was begun the 11th of June, 1550, and made fit for navigation on the 11th of October, 1561, under the direction of the celebrated architect George Rimaldi; the elevation of the ground is 50 feet, and regulated by means of five ſluices; the length of the canal is about ſeven leagues, and is ſaid to have coſt 1,800,000 florins: by this means, the ocean and the Scheldt are open to Bruſſels, to the great convenience of the trade of the city. The palace where the governor reſides, was begun in the year 1300, by John II. duke of Brabant, enlarged in the year 1452, by Philip the Good, and finiſhed by his ſucceſſors; it ſtands on an eminence with a large ſquare before it, encircled with pillars of braſs, on which are ſtatues of ſeveral emperors and dukes of Brabant, large as life, finiſhed in the year 1521; behind the palace is an extenſive and beautiful park, well ſtocked with deer and planted with trees; at the extremity, near the gate of Louvain, ſtands a pleaſure houſe, built by order of Charles V. where he ſometimes reſided after his abdication of the crown, in favour of his ſon Philip II. hence called the Emperor's Houſe. The Hotel de Ville in the grand market-place is a remarkable ſtructure, it was begun in 1380, and not finiſhed before the year 1442; its turret is an admirable piece of Gothic architecture, 364 feet in height; on the top is the figure of St. Michael in copper gilt, 17 feet high, which turns with the wind. There are many palaces belonging to the nobility, the prince of Ligne, duke of Aremberg, &c. in which are many very valuable paintings by the beſt Flemiſh maſters. The opera houſe is a grand ſtructure, erected in the year 1700, after the Italian manner, by order of the elector of Bavaria, then governor-general of the Low Countries. The church of Ste. Gudlue, which is collegiate, is a very magnificent ſtructure, ſituated in a higher part of the city, and approached by a flight of ſteps; it was built in the year 1047, by Lambert, ſurnamed Balderic, duke of Brabant, and dedicated to Ste. Gudule, whoſe remains were removed hither from the church of St. Geri, at the inſtigation of Gerard, biſhop of Cambray. Beſides the pariſh churches, there are a great many chapels, monaſteries, and convents. The governor-general kept his court with the honours of a ſovereign prince, being attended with a company of archers, a company of halberdiers, and three companies of horſe guards. The magiſtracy of Bruſſels is compoſed of an officer called amman, a burgomaſter, ſeven echevins, two treaſurers, a penſionary, three ſecretaries, three greffiers, and two receivers; beſides theſe they have a deputy amman, an under burgomaſter, nine counſellors choſen from the citizens, a ſuperintendant of the canal, a receiver for the canal, and a greffier of the treaſury; the office of amman, deputy amman, ſecretaries and greffiers of the city and treaſury, are perpetual. The deſcendants of the ancient patrician families, who are divided into ſeven claſſes, aſſembled ſome days before the feaſt of St. John, and nominated three perſons of each body, whom they repreſented to the ſovereign or governor, for him to chooſe and appoint magiſtrates from, on the feaſt of St. John, O. S. The ſecond burgomaſter and the nine counſellors, with the receivers, are named by the firſt burgomaſter, matters relating to the citizens, are cognizable before the magiſtracy in the firſt inſtance, with right of appeal to the ſuperior council. The citizens are divided into nine claſſes, called nations, who were formed in the year 1321, of the principal artiſans of the city; they are diſtinguiſhed by the nations of Notre Dame, of St. Giles, St. Laurent, St. Geri, St. Jean, St. Chriſtophre, St. Jaques, St. Pierre, and St. Nicholas, each claſs including ſeveral companies of tradeſman, who have each a chief, or dean, with their aſſiſtant counſel: they were aſſembled by the ſound of a bell, called the bell of the nations, to ſignify their conſent to any ſubſidy which the ſovereign may demand or approve, in the name of the whole city, or to any propoſitions which may be made by the burgomaſter. In the year 1695, the army of France under the conduct of marſhal Villeroy, advanced towards Bruſſels for the purpoſe of compelling the allies to raiſe the ſiege of the caſtle of Namur, and began to bombard it on the 13th of Auguſt, when they poured in ſuch a quantity of bombs and red hot balls, that the city took fire, and the fire being ſeconded with a violent wind, burnt 14 beautiful churches, and above 4000 houſes to aſhes; after this the French retired, without being able to conſtrain the allies to abandon their enterpriſe. After the battle of Ramilies, the elector of Bavaria and all the friends of Philip V. abandoned Bruſſels, and the allies ſeized it the 27th of May, 1706. As the city was not regularly fortified, or in a condition to ſuſtain a ſiege, the magiſtrates preſented the keys of the city to the duke of Marlborough, commander in chief, and implored his protection, who accordingly took poſſeſſion in the name of Charles III. king of Spain, who made general Churchill, the duke of Marlborough's brother, governor. The 22d of November, 1708, it was beſieged by a body of troops under the command of Maximilian Emanuel, elector of Bavaria, but his highneſs being informed that the duke of Marlborough had paſſed the Scheldt, with a large part of his army, to ſuccour the city, he was obliged to abandon the ſiege, with all his artillery, the 27th of the ſame month, after having been repulſed at the counterſcarp, between the gates of Louvain and Namur. It was taken by the French in 1746, and rendered back at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle. The army of the French entered Bruſſels on the 14th of November, 1792, under the command of Dumourier, ſoon after the battle of Gemappe; and quitted it again the 23d of March, 1793, ſoon after the battle near Louvain. The French took it again in the ſummer of 1794: 23 miles S. Antwerp, and 26 SE. Ghent. Long. 21. 57. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 49. N.

BUDA, or Offen, a city and capital of Lower Hungary, ſituated on an eminence, on the weſt ſide of the Danube, oppoſite Peſt, formerly the reſidence of the Hungarian kings. In the year 1526, the ſultan Solyman appeared before the city, with his numerous army; and after battering the walls about three hours, his troops ſcaled them, and entering the town ſword in hand, butchered all the inhabitants and garriſon they could find. The caſtle capitulated; but its garriſon were made priſoners. In 1526, it was retaken by the archduke, and in 1529, Solyman became maſter of it again. In the years 1530, 1540, 1542, 1598, 1599, 1602, and 1603, fruitleſs attempts were made to wreſt it from the Turks. In the year 1684, the duke of Lorrain inveſted it. The garriſon at this time conſiſted of 18,000 men, commanded by Cara-Mehemet Baſha, a brave and expert officer, and who knew better how to make a regular defence than the Turks at this time uſually did. The beſieged made ſeveral ſallies, with good ſucceſs, and in general defended themſelves much better than the Turks had ever done before. They even repulſed the Imperialiſts in a general aſſault; which misfortune, and a mortal dyſentery that reigned in the army, obliged the duke of Lorrain to raiſe the ſiege, after he had loſt 30,000 men to no purpoſe. In June 1686, the duke of Lorrain again laid ſiege to Buda. On the 21ſt, his trenches were opened, when a furious bombardment began. By the 24th, three breaches were made, and ſeveral times the town was ſet on fire. Schoning, the Brandenburg general, led the firſt attack, which proved fatal, from the many mines ſprung. The elector, with the princes Louis and Eugene, attacked in another place, and by their great intrepidity the place was carried. The duke then ſent to ſummon the baſha, offering him honourable terms, which the other bravely rejected. Three thouſand Turks, that made a ſally on the 27th of July, did conſiderable damage; and prince Eugene had a horſe killed under him in the ſkirmiſh. The ſame day, a breach that was made in the caſtle was attacked by the beſiegers; they entered it twice ſword in hand, but they were as often repulſed, with the loſs of 500 men; among whom where the counts of Stahrenberg, Heberſtein, and Kaunitz: the princes Eugene, and Louis of Baden, were ſlightly wounded. At laſt the beſiegers had puſhed their attack ſo far, that every thing was ready for a general aſſault, which, after all means to make the baſha ſurrender had been ineffectual, was given with great fury. The city was taken and ſacked, and the brave baſha was found dead on the breach, happy in not being a witneſs of the bloodſhed his reſolution had occaſioned. The German ſoldiers, enraged againſt the Turks for their obſtinate reſiſtance, had no reſpect to age or ſex, but exerted their vengeance on every Mahometan they met, till the duke of Lorrain and the elector put an end to the execution. In the year 1770, in the war betweeen the Ruſſians and Turks, the Tartars paſſing the Nieſter, near Balta, began to carry their ravages into Poland, but were repulſed at the firſt onſet. Neverthele∫s, on the 16th of March, they rallied again, and endeavoured to regain their own frontiers; but a Ruſſian detachment, commanded by Captain Stukulow, coming up with them, in the neighbourhood of Buda, attacked and defeated them; ſeized their camp, and took all their baggage. A ſultan, two mirzas, and 326 private men were killed on the ſpot, and 362 Chriſtians and Jews were reſcued from ſlavery. The warm baths of Buda are ſaid to be ſome of the moſt magnificent in Europe. From the grapes growing on the neighbouring hills is made a red wine in great eſtimation: 125 miles ESE. Vienna, and 150 NNW. Belgrade.

CACHEMIRE, or Caſhmere, a country of Aſia, once the ſeat of a powerful kingdom, which extended northward into Tartary, and ſouthward to the Indian Sea, at preſent confined to a valley about 70 miles in length, and 40 in breadth. The hiſtory of the country repreſents it to have been originally a vaſt lake, which forced an opening through the mountains. It is a rich champagne country, embelliſhed with a great number of ſmall hills, and ſurrounded by mountains. The mountains that are leaſt elevated are covered with trees and paſtures, which feed a multitude of cattle: here are found hares, antelopes, civets, partridges, and vaſt ſwarms of bees, but neither ſerpents, bears, tygers, or lions. Behind theſe are mountains more elevated, always covered with ſnow, and whoſe tops reach above the clouds; from theſe deſcend innumerable ſprings and brooks, which fertiliſe the country, and uniting together, run into the Indus in one ſtream. The country reſembles a garden interſperſed with a great number of towns and villages, varied with beautiful trees, green meadows, fields of rice, hemp, ſaffron, and different legumes interſected by canals winding through them in all forms. The country is one of the moſt beautiful in the univerſe; the Moguls call it the terreſtrial paradiſe of the Indies. The air is pure and ſerene, the men lively and well made, and the women handſome; the inhabitants are more induſtrious than thoſe of other countries of India. They manufacture palankins, beds, cabinets, eſcrutoires, but more eſpecially thoſe ſtuffs called chales, or ſhawls, which ſerve the Moguls and Indians to cover the head and ſhoulders, and have been of late years brought into Europe. Some are made of the wool of the country, which is much finer than that of Spain: but others are manufacturd from hair cut from the breaſt of the goats of Thibet, called touk, which is much ſofter and more delicate than the hair of the beaver. The latter are very dear. The Cachemirians have a language of their own, ſaid to be more ancient than the Sanſcrit; and a religion different from that of the Hindoos. According to the evidence of an eaſtern hiſtorian, "without paying reſpect to traditions, they are the true worſhippers of God."

CACHEMIRE, or Caſhmere, called alſo Sirinagur, a city of Aſia, and capital of the country of Cachemire, ſuppoſed to have been the Caſpira of the ancients, is ſituated on the river Behut, about three quarters of a league long, and half a league wide; but without walls. About two leagues from it the mountains form a circular baſon, and turn their ſprings into a lake about 4 leagues in circumference, which empties itſelf into the river by a navigable canal. The houſes are of wood, and well built; they were formerly of ſtone, but the injuries they receive from frequent earthquakes induced the inhabitants to change their materials. The city is adorned with a great number of fountains, reſervoirs, and temples, among the latter is one to which they give the name of the temple of Solomon. Long. 73. 44. E. CADIZ, a city and ſea-port of Spain, ſituated on a ſandy peninſula, in the Atlantic Ocean, at the entrance of a bay to which it gives name, firſt built by the Phœnicians, who called it Gadez. Its form is nearly ſquare; on the ſouth ſide it is rendered inacceſſible by the ſea, from the height and ſteepneſs of the ſhore ; on the eaſt ſide toward the land it is defended by two ſtrong baſtions ; and to the north by ſeveral rocks and ſand banks ; the point which runs out weſterly is defended by a fort, which covers the entrance of the bay. It is likewiſe defended by a caſtle : the ſtreets are broad, ſtraight, and well paved ; the houſes are large and commodious ; and the number of merchants who reſide there can ſcarcely be imagined ; in fact, the whole city is engaged in trade. In the year 1776, 949 ſhips from different ports entered the harbour of Cadiz. The commerce of Cadiz can leave but few hands to induſtry, there are, however, about twenty ribbon looms, and machines for knotting ſilk, which appear to have a conſiderable ſale for their produce. There are ſeveral manufactures, whoſe chief employment is to put their marks on the ſtockings they recive from Nimes, and which are then ſhipped for the American ſettlements, where all foreign ſtockings are prohibited. There are ſeveral linen manufactures in the neighbourhood, but the manufacture of ſalt is the moſt intereſting branch of induſtry in the environs of Cadiz. Cadiz is ſurrounded with walls, which contribute more to its embelliſhment than to its defence. This port is the centre of the commerce to the Weſt Indies and to America. The veſſels of Spain carry out the productions of Europe, and the beſt of every kind, and bring back gold, ſilver, precious ſtones, cochineal, indigo, coffee, tobacco, woods of different kinds, chocolate, &c. which are diſtributed into other countries. Here are merchants from moſt of the ſtates in Europe, as Iriſh, Flemings, Genoeſe, and Germans ; the Engliſh and Dutch are not numerous. There are many Frenchmen, ſome of which are capital merchants, but the greater part are in an inferior ſtyle, rather retail dealers than merchants. Cadiz is the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Seville ; the inhabitants are computed at ſixty thouſand. In the year 1596, Cadiz was taken and plundered by the Engliſh under the earl of Eſſex, and the lord high admiral Howard. In the year 1702, an attempt was made by the duke of Ormond and Sir George Rook, with ſome Engliſh and Dutch, to ſeize Cadiz for the archduke Charles, but, after landing ſome troops, they found the ſcheme impracticable and returned. Long. 10. 20. CADORIN, a diſtrict of the Treviſan, belonging to Venice ; it is ſmall and mountainous ; bounded on the north by Carinthia, on the eaſt by Friuli, on the ſouth by the Belluneſe, and on the weſt by the biſhopric of Brixen, about 25 miles long, and from 10 to 15 broad.

CADSAND, an iſland, near the coaſt of Flanders, at the mouth of the Scheldt. This iſland is preſerved, by lofty dykes, conſtructed at a vaſt expence, from the inundations of the ſea ; and yet ſcarcely free from danger when the north-weſt wind blows with violence. The land is fertile, and the corn is equal to any produced in the United States, the meadows are luxuriant, and the farmers make a large quantity of excellent cheeſe. A great number of perſecuted French and Saltzburgers came here to ſettle, and found peace and toleration. Caſſandria is the principal place.—It was taken by the French in the month of July, 1794.

CAEN, a city of France, and capital of the department of Calvados, ſituated on the rivers Orne and Odon ; before the revolution, it was the capital of Lower Normandy, with a celebrated univerſity, founded by Charles VII. and an academy of the belles lettres. Caen, with the reſt of Normandy, was at one time ſubject to the King of England. In the year 1104, it was ſeized by Philip the Auguſt, king of France, and remained ſubject to that crown till the year 1346, when it was beſieged and taken by Edward III. after a ſevere conteſt, and the loſs of a great number of lives. In the year 1417, it was again taken by the troops of Henry V. and continued in the hands of the Engliſh till the year 1448, when it was taken by Charles VII. king of France : 26½ poſts W. Paris. Long. 17. 18. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 11. N.

CAERFILLY, or Caerphilly, a town of South Wales, in the county of Glamorgan, ſituated on the river Rumney ; near which are the remains of a caſtle, which was taken from the Spencers, favourites of Edward II. by the prince of Wales. Here is a conſiderable furnace and a fulling mill. The neighbourhood abounds with coal and iron ore. It has a weekly market on Thurſdays : 30 miles SW. Monmouth, and 158 W. London.

CAERLION, a town of England, in the county of Monmouth, ſituated on the Uſk, once the metropolis of all Wales ; the ſee of an archbiſhop from the firſt eſtabliſhment of Chriſtianity in the iſland, till the year 521, when it was removed to Menevia, now St. David's, by St. David, the then archbiſhop. King Arthur is ſaid to have kept his court, and to have inveſted the order of the knights of the round table in this place. It is now much reduced from its former grandeur ; but has yet two markets weekly, on Thurſday and Saturday ; trading veſſels ſail regularly every week to and from Briſtol, from whence it is diſtant 26 miles, and 148 W. London.

CAERMARTHEN, or Caermarden, a town of South Wales, and capital of the county to which it gives name, ſituated on the river Gwilly, about 10 miles from the Briſtol Channel, and near the river Towy. It has two markets weekly on Wedneſday and Saturday ; it is a borough town, and ſends one member to the Britiſh parliament : 45 miles W. Brecon, and 212 W. London.

CAERMARTHENSHIRE, a county of South Wales, bounded on the north by the county of Cardigan, from which it is ſeparated by the river Tivy, on the eaſt by Brecknockſhire, and Glamorganſhire, on the ſouth by the Briſtol Channel, and on the weſt by Pembrokeſhire : about 35 miles long, 20 broad, and 102 in circumference. The country is in general mountainous, woody, and well watered. The air is reckoned mild and healthy, and the ſoil fertile. Coals and lime-ſtone are plentiful. It is divided into ſix hundreds, and contains eight towns, which are Caermarthen, Llanymdovery, Llanellelly, Kidwelly, Llangadock, Llandillo-Vawr, Laugharn, and Newcaſtle in Emlyn. The principal rivers are the Towy, the Cothy, and the Tave. This country returns two members to the Britiſh parliament, one for the county, and one for the town of Caermarthen.

CAERNARVON, a ſea-port town of North Wales, and capital of the county to which it gives name, ſituated on the river Menai, with a celebrated caſtle, ſuppoſed to have been built by Edward I. after reducing the Welſh, and the death of the prince Llewellyn, in which Edward II. was born. The walls are defended by a number of round towers, with two principal gates ; the eaſt facing the mountains, and the weſt the Menai.

Edward II. was born in a ſmall dark room, not 12 feet long, nor 8 broad. The walls of this fortreſs are 7 feet 9 inches thick, having within their thickneſs a gallery, with narrow ſlips for the diſcharge of arrows. In the year 1294, the town and caſtle were ſurpriſed by the Welſh, and many Engliſhmen killed. In the year 1644, the town was taken by captain Swanley, an officer of the parliament, who made 400 priſoners, with a great quantity of arms, ammunition, and plunder. It was afterwards retaken by the royaliſts, and lord Byron appointed governor, who was compelled to yield, in the year 1646, to general Mytton, though on honourable terms. In the year 1648, Sir John Owen beſieged it, but colonel Carter and colonel Twiſſelton marching to relieve the place, Sir John was defeated and made priſoner, when the whole country ſubmitted to the parliament. Caernarvon has no manufactures, but carries on a conſiderable trade with London, Briſtol, Liverpool, and Ireland. It was made a free borough by Edward I. and ſends one member to the Britiſh Parliament. It has a weekly market on Saturday. The harbour is tolerably good, with nine feet at low water: 9 miles SSW. Bangor, and 253 NW. London. Long. 4. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 53. 6. N.

CAERNARVONSHIRE, a county of North Wales, bounded on the north by the ſea, on the eaſt by Denbighſhire, on the ſouth by Merionethſhire and the ſea, and on the weſt by the Iriſh Sea and the Menai. Its length from north to ſouth about 40 miles, in breadth from eaſt to weſt 20. It is divided into ſeven hundreds, and contains one city, viz. Bangor, and 5 market towns, Aberconway, Caernarvon, Pwlhelly, Crickieth, and Newin. In Caernarvonſhire are many mountains and lakes. Of the former Snowden is reckoned the chief, and the number of the latter is ſaid to amount to 50 or 60. In the mountainous part little corn is produced, but the inhabitants keep a great number of cattle and ſheep, which, during the ſummer, feed very high in the mountains, guarded by the owners, who reſide with them in temporary huts. The vales yield ſome good graſs for hay. In ſome of the lakes are found the char, and other Alpine fiſh. Copper and lead ores have been found in various parts of the mountains, and many plants peculiar to the moſt elevated ſituations. The inhabitants of the more retired parts live in a ſtate of the utmoſt ſimplicity, manufacturing their clothes themſelves from their own flocks, and dying the cloth with plants gathered on the mountains.

CAFFA, or Kaffa, a ſea-port of Ruſſia, ſee Theodoſia.

CAFFRARIA, that part of Africa which lies between Congo, Negroland, Abyſſinia, and the ſea. The name is ſaid to be derived from the Arabic word Cafier, which ſignifies Infidel; the Mahometans giving this name to all who are of a different religion from themſelves. Caffraria may be divided into two parts, Caffraria Proper, and the country of the Hottentots. The internal parts are but little known; the inhabitants of Caffraria Proper are generally taller than the Hottentots, more robuſt, more fierce, and much bolder. Their figure is more agreeable; their countenances have not that narrowneſs, nor their cheeks thoſe prominences which are ſo diſagreeable among the Hottentots; neither have they the broad flat faces and thick lips of the inhabitants of Moſambique; they tattoo themſelves much, and never greaſe their hair, which is frizzled in a very great degree. In the hot ſeaſon they always go naked; in the cold weather they wear kroſſes made of calves' or ox' hides, which reach down to the ground. They ſeem to underſtand ſomething of agriculture, and entertain a very exalted idea of the Supreme Being, believing in a future ſtate of rewards to the good, and puniſhment to the evil. Their arms are a plain lance, or aſſagay, which they throw with ſurpriſing ſkill and force. They are governed by kings, whoſe power is hereditary, but very circumſcribed. They live ſo familiarly amongſt their cattle, and ſpeak to them with ſo much mildneſs, that they pay the moſt perfect obedience to their voice. Among the animals are the tzezeiran, or blue antelope, and the nou, or gnou, a beautiful and rare animal, which in ſhape reſembles a ſmall ox; there is alſo a ſmall ſpecies of antelope, called Nou-metges, which ſeldom appears in the plains, but keeps itſelf concealed in the buſhes and thickeſt parts of the foreſts, and is at the utmoſt not more than 12 or 15 inches in height. Among the birds, are oſtriches, buſtards, the green and golden cuckow of the Cape, and a ſpecies of ſmall eagle, with a long red bill, the back, wings, and tail of a lively blue, which feeds upon inſects, inhabits the woods, and makes its neſts in hollow trees. Among the reptiles, is the golden yellow ſerpent, called kooper-capel, whoſe bite is mortal, they grow to the length of upwards of five feet, and nine inches in circumference. The huts of the Caffers are more ſpacious and higher than thoſe of the Hottentots, and of a more regular form; their frames are conſtructed of wood work, well put together, and plaſtered within and without with a mixture of cow's dung and clay. The women form veſſels of clay, and weave baſkets of ſo cloſe a texture, as to be capable of holding milk or water. They principally prepare the fields for receiving ſeed, which is chiefly millet.

CAI-FONG, or Kai-fong, a city of China, and capital of the province of Ho-nan, is ſituated at the diſtance of two leagues from the river Hoang-ho: but the ground around it is ſo low that the river is higher than the city. To prevent inundations, ſtrong dykes have been raiſed, which extend more than thirty leagues. This city having been beſieged in 1642, by an army of 100,000 rebels, headed by one Ly-tchuang, the commander of the troops ſent to relieve it, formed the fatal deſign of drowning the enemy, by breaking down the large dyke of Hoang-ho: this ſtratagem ſucceeded; but at the ſame time, the city was overflowed, and the inundation was ſo violent and ſudden, that it deſtroyed 300,000 inhabitants. It appears by the ruins, which ſtill ſubſiſt, that Cai-fong muſt then have been three leagues in circumference. It has been rebuilt ſince this diſmal event, but in a ſtyle far inferior to its former magnificence. Nothing at preſent diſtinguiſhes it from ordinary cities but the extent of its juriſdiction, which comprehends four cities of the ſecond claſs, and thirty of the third: 315 miles SW. CAIRO, or El Kahera, a city of Egypt, built about the year 795, by order of the kalif Kairvan, a little to the eaſt of the Nile, on a canal which was dug from the Nile to the Red Sea, by order of Kalif Omar, when Egypt was firſt taken by the Arabians; this canal now through neglect filled up, between Cairo and the Red Sea, reaches no farther than the Birket el Hadsji, or Lake of the Pilgrims. About two centuries after the walls were built, which meaſured three leagues in circumference. In the fifteenth century, it was one of the richeſt and moſt flouriſhing cities in the world; the emporium of Egypt and Aſia, with merchants that traded from India to the Straits of Gibraltar; canals were made to aſſiſt its commerce, and arts and ſciences were cultivated. It was taken by Sultan Selim, in the year 1517, and has from that time been ſubject to the Turks, and governed by a pacha. The pacha has only a nominal authority, the real power reſides in the beys, or governors of the provinces: theſe are at preſent the ſovereigns of Egypt, for the grand ſeignor's repreſentative is a phantom with which they ſport: they keep him to ſerve their own purpoſes, then diſmiſs him with ſhame. He cannot leave his palace, in which he is a priſoner, without permiſſion. The caſtle of Cairo ſtands on a ſteep rock, and is ſurrounded with thick walls, on which are ſtrong towers. It was a place of great force before the invention of gunpowder; but, being commanded by the neighbouring mountains, it would not ſtand the fire of a battery erected there, two hours. It is more than the fourth of a league in circumference; the rock being ſteep, there are two roads cut to it, which lead to doors guarded by Aſſabs and janiſſaries. The firſt watch the lower part of the fortreſs, and the others what is properly called the citadel; whence, with ſix wretched pieces of artillery, turned on the pacha's apartment, they oblige him to retire, as ſoon as the beys have given the command. Joſeph's well, made by a vizir of that name, about 700 years ſince, by order of ſultan Mahomet, is among the things the moſt curious the caſtle contains. It is ſunk in the rock two hundred and eighty feet deep, and forty in circumference. It includes two excavations, not perpendicular to each other. A ſtair-caſe the deſcent of which is exceedingly gentle, is carried round; the partition which ſeparates this ſtair-caſe from the well is part of the rock, left only ſix inches thick, with windows cut, at intervals, to give light; but as they are ſmall, and ſome of them low, it is neceſſary to deſcend by the light of candles. There is a reſervoir, and a level ſpace, at that part of the well where it takes a new direction; and oxen which turn a machine that draws water from the bottom of the well. Other oxen, above, raiſe it from this reſervoir by a ſimilar machine. This water comes from the Nile; and, as it has been filtered through ſand impregnated with ſalt and nitre, is brackiſh. Contrary to the general cuſtom of the eaſt, the houſes have two and three ſtories, over which is a terrace of ſtone or tiles; in general they are of earth and bricks badly burnt; the reſt are of ſoft ſtone, of a fine grain, procured from a neighbouring mountain. All theſe houſes have the air of priſons, for they have no light from the ſtreet; as it is extremely dangerous to have many windows in ſuch a country: they take every precaution to make the entering door very low. The rooms within are ill contrived. Among the great, however, are to be found a few ornaments and conveniencies; their vaſt halls, eſpecially, in which water ſpouts up into marble baſons, are peculiarly well adapted to the climate. The paved floor, inlaid with marble and coloured earthen ware, is covered with mats and matraſſes, and over all is ſpread a rich carpet, on which they ſit croſs-legged. Around the wall is a ſort of ſofa, with cuſhions to ſupport the back and elbows; and above, at the height of ſeven or eight feet, a range of ſhelves, decked out with China and Japaneſe porcelain. The walls, naked in other reſpects, are chequered with ſentences extracted from the Koran, and painted foliage and flowers, with which alſo the porticos of the beys are covered; the windows have neither glaſs nor moving ſaſhes, but only an open lattice work. The light enters from the inner courts, from whence the ſycamores reflect a verdure pleaſing to the eye. An opening to the north, or at the top of the cieling, admits a refreſhing breeze, while, by a whimſical contradiction they wrap themſelves up in warm woollen cloths and furs. Cairo contains near 300 moſques of different ſizes. The population has by ſome been eſtimated at 700,000, but it is more likely not to exceed 300,000. Long. 49. 7. E. Ferro. Lat. 30. 2. N.

CAIRO, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Montſerrat, taken by the French in April, 1796, 12 miles E. Ceva.

CAITHNESS, a county of Scotland, bounded on the north, eaſt, and ſouth-eaſt, by the ſea, and on the ſouth-weſt and weſt, by the county of Sutherland. The form is an irregular triangle, its length from north to ſouth 36 miles, and its breadth about 20. At the north-eaſt extremity, is John a Groat's Houſe, a village, from whence is the general paſſage to the Orkney-Iſlands, which is ſeparated by what is called Pentland Frith, about 12 miles diſtant from the coaſt of Caithneſs. The air is ſharp and piercing in winter, but mild and ſerene in ſummer. In the month of June, it is ſo light for ſeveral nights together, that the ſmalleſt print may be read at midnight. The coaſts have many bays and capes; the interior part is mountainous; but ſome parts are low, and produce corn, &c. for exportation. There are but few woods, and none which yield what may be properly called timber. The mountains abound with red deer, roebucks, and black cattle; with eagles and various kinds of game. There are ſeveral rivers and many lochs, which afford a variety of excellent fiſh. The ſmall iſlands of Stroma and Pentland Skerries, belong to this county. The principal towns are Thurſo and Wick, from which laſt it is ſometimes called The County of Wick.

CALAIS, a ſea-port town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Straits of Calais, ſtrongly fortified and defended with a citadel: the harbour is too much obſtructed with ſand to admit large veſſels, or even common merchant veſſels, except at high water. In time of peace, here are regular packets for the mail to and from England; and other paſſage boats are continually paſſing between this place and Dover. It has a communication, by means of canals, with St. Omer, Gravelines, Bourbourg, Dunkirk, &c. In the year 1228, it began to be fortified, being before a village belonging to the county of Boulogn. In the year 1308, it was ſurrounded with walls; and in 1347, was ſo ſtrong, that Edward III. king of England, could only take it by famine. It continued attached to the Engliſh crown till the year 1558, when it was taken by the duke of Guiſe. By the treaty at Chateau Cambreſis, it was agreed, that Calais ſhould, after the expiration of eight years, be reſtored to England; and at the expiration of that term, queen Elizabeth ſent ſome troops to recover it, but the ſurrender was refuſed, becauſe five years before, the Engliſh had taken Havre, and violated the terms of the treaty. In the year 1596, it was taken by the Spaniards, under the conduct of the archduke Albert, but was reſtored two years after, by the peace of Vervins. Calais was bombarded by the Engliſh under ſir Clondeſly Shovel, in the year 1694, but without ſuſtaining much damage. It contains only one pariſh, and between 4000 and 5000 inhabitants: 5 poſts SW. CALCUTTA, a city of Hindooſtan, and capital of Bengal, ſituated on the weſt ſide of the Hoogly, which is a branch of the Ganges, and navigable for the Engliſh Eaſt India ſhips. In the beginning of the preſent century, it was a village, but ſince that, has been conſtantly increaſing, and is now ſuppoſed to contain 500,000 inhabitants. The houſes belonging to the Engliſh, are in general handſome, and well built of brick; though others belonging to the natives are generally of one ſtory only, and built of earth and thatched, or of brick with flat roofs. In the year 1756, Suraja Dowla, the nabob of Bengal, irritated at the protection given to one of his ſubjects in the Engliſh fort at Calcutta, and, as it is ſaid, at the refuſal of ſome duties to which he claimed a right, levied a great army, and laid ſiege to that place. The governor, terrified by the numbers of the enemy, abandoned the fort, with ſeveral of the principal perſons in the ſettlement, who ſaved themſelves, with their moſt valuable effects, on board the ſhips. Thus deſerted, Mr. Holwell, the ſecond in command, bravely held the place to the laſt extremity, with a few gallant friends, and the remains of a feeble garriſon. The fort was taken the 20th of June, in the year 1756, and the garriſon being made priſoners, were thruſt into a narrow dungeon, called the Black-hole. By narratives made public, it appears, that of 146 priſoners, 123 were ſmothered in the Black-hole priſon, before the doors of the priſon were opened the next morning. The year following, Calcutta was retaken by colonel Clive, and ſoon after Suraja Dowla was defeated at the battle of Plaſſey, and depoſed by Jaffier Ali Cawn, one of his principal officers, who was made nabob in his room, which, with the defeat and ſubſequent death of the nabob, gave the Britiſh an unlimited power and influence over the whole country of Bengal. Calcutta is the emporium; the reſidence of the governor and council of Bengal: the ſeat of juſtice under four judges, who diſpenſe judgment according to the laws of England. Long. 88. 30. E. Greenwich. Lat. 22. 37. N.

CALDER WATER, a river of Scotland, which runs into the Clyde, about 5 miles above Glaſgow.

CALDERINO, a place of Italy, in the Veroneſe, celebrated for its baths; called alſo The Baths of Verona.

CALDERO, a village of Italy, in the Veroneſe, where in the campaign of 1796, a battle was fought between the French and Auſtrians; in which the former were victorious, and took 200 priſoners: 9 miles SE. Verona.

CALDONAZZO, a lake of Germany, in the county of Tyrol: 8 miles ESE. Trent.

CALDUENDO, a town of Spain, in the province of Guipuſcoa: 8 leagues E. Vittoria.

CALDY, a ſmall iſland near the ſouth coaſt of Wales: 3 miles S. Tenby.

CALEAL, a town of Perſia, in the province of Adirbeitzan: 152 miles SE. Tauris.

CALEDONIA (New), a ſea-port and ſetlement on the Iſthmus of Darien, near the Gulf of Mexico, founded in the year 1699, by ſome Scotch families, which flouriſhed for a time; but from ſome cauſe or other, has been in the hands of the Spaniards, ſince the beginning of the preſent century. Long. 77. 36. W. Greenwich. Lat. 9. 30. N.

CALEDONIA (New), a large iſland in the Southern Pacific Ocean, between the 164 and 168 degrees of eaſt longitude from Greenwich, and 19 and 23 degrees of ſouth latitude.—This iſland extends from Long. 163. 37. to 167. 14. E. Greenwich; and from Lat. 19. 37. to 22. 30. S. Captain Cook ſays, it lies nearly north-weſt-half-weſt, and ſouth-eaſt-half-eaſt, and is about 87 leagues long in that direction; but its breadth is not conſiderable, nor any where exceeding 10 leagues. It is a country full of hills and vallies of various extent both for height and depth; to judge of the whole by the parts we were on. From theſe hills ſpring vaſt numbers of little rivulets, which greatly contribute to fertilize the plains, and to ſupply all the wants of the inhabitants. The ſummits of moſt of the hills ſeem to be barren, though ſome few are clothed with wood, as are all the plains and vallies. By reaſon of theſe hills, many parts of the coaſt, when at a diſtance from it, appeared indented, or to have great inlets between the hills; but when we came near the ſhore, we always found ſuch places ſhut up with low land, and alſo obſerved low land to lie along the coaſt, between the ſea-ſhore, and the foot of the hills. As this was the caſe in all ſuch parts as we came near enough to ſee, it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that the whole coaſt is ſo. I am likewiſe of opinion, that the whole, or greateſt part, is ſurrounded by reefs or ſhoals, which render the acceſs to it very dangerous, but at the ſame time guard the coaſt from the violence of the wind and ſea, make it abound with fiſh; ſecure an eaſy and ſafe navigation along it, for canoes, &c. and, moſt likely, form ſome good harbours for ſhipping. Moſt, if not every part of the coaſt is inhabited, the iſle of Pines not excepted, for we ſaw either ſmoke by day or fires by night, wherever we came.

CALEMUT, or Salamanie, a river of North America, which runs into the Wabaſh, 12 miles eaſt from Eel Town, near which general Sinclair was defeated by the Indians, in the year 1791.

CALENBERG, a principality of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, which takes its name from an ancient caſtle now in ruins, ſituated on the Leina, 11 miles ſouth from Hanover. It is divided into two parts by the principality of Wolfenbuttel. The northern part is ſurrounded by the principality of Luneburg, the biſhopric of Hildeſheim, the principality of Wolfenbuttel, the counties of Pyrmont, Lippe, Schauenburg, Hoya, and Minden. The ſouth part by the principalities of Wolfenbuttel, Grubenhagen, Eichsfeld, and Lower Heſſe. It conſtitutes a part of the duchy of Brunſwick, and is compoſed of ancient lordſhips, countries, and eccleſiaſtical eſtates united. The country is in ſome parts mountainous, in ſome marſhy, and others ſandy, but generally fertile; producing wheat, rye, barley, oats, tobacco, hops, flax, &c. There are numerous manufactures of woollen and linen, cotton and ſilk, in the different ſhapes, both for home conſumption and exportation. They reckon 36 towns great and ſmall, the principal of which are Hanover, Hameln, Gottingen, and Newſtadt; the principal rivers are the Leine, on the eaſt, and the Weſer, on the weſt.

CALEPIO, a town of Italy, in the Bergamaſco.

CALERZANO, a town of the iſland of Corſica, 6 miles SE. Calvi.

CALICO, a river of European Turkey, which runs into the Gulf of Saloniki: 14 miles SW. Saloniki.

CALICOULAN, a Dutch factory in Hindooſtan, on the coaſt of Malabar: 80 miles NW. Cape Comorin.

CALICUT, a country, and once a conſiderable empire of Aſia, which extended itſelf throughout all Malabar. Its chief took the title of king of kings. The laſt of theſe princes, called Sarana Parimal, having embraced Mahometaniſm, retired to Mecca to end his days, and divided his dominions between the princes of his own blood, reſerving, as we are told, a ſpace of 12 leagues for one of theſe princes, or a favourite page, who was to have the title of Samorin, and the others to render homage to him. The Samorin built a city in the ſame place, from whence Parimal took his departure, and called it Calicut. It was the firſt place in the Eaſt Indies viſited by the Portugueſe. They were received in a friendly manner, but a quarrel ſoon after happening, the Samorin forced them to quit his dominions, and deſtroyed their commerce. The preſent prince is a Brahman, and it is the only kingdom in the Indies governed by a Brahman; every where elſe, the Brahmans are only ſecretaries and miniſters. This ſtate, which the Indians call Malleami, is 25 leagues long, and from 14 to 18 broad. The air is pure and wholeſome, the ſoil fertile, but ſubject to inundations, from the amazing rapidity of the waters which pour down from the mountains; and the ſea has frequently made ſuch ravages on the coaſt, as to oblige the Samorin to remove his reſidence from the town of Calicut to Panana. The Samorin is ſaid to be able to raiſe an army of 100,000 men.

CALICUT, formerly the capital of the kingdom ſo called; and even now a large town, containing about 5 or 600 houſes, built of wood, or bricks baked in the ſun, in the midſt of which are beautiful gardens. It is 3 leagues in circumference, including a large village, or faux-bourg, inhabited only by fiſhermen. It is not ſurrounded by walls, and is governed by a viceroy, who finds means to get rich. It has no police, and the commerce is very much encumbered by burdenſome duties, generally farmed by Mahometans. That it is not entirely ruined, is owing to a neighbouring river, by which they bring down tekwood from the neighbouring mountains. The coaſt is low, and affords no ſhelter, and the only acceſs to it is in ſmall flat-bottomed boats: 76 miles W. Coimbetore, and 95 SE. Seringapatam. Long. 75. 44. E. Greenwich. Lat. 11. 20.

CALIES, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and New Mark of Brandenburg, chiefly inhabited by cloth weavers: 16 miles E. Reetz.

CALIFORNIA, a peninſula in the Pacific Ocean, united on the north to the continent of North America, from which the other part is ſeparated by a narrow ſea, called the Gulf of California, and bounded on the ſouth and weſt by the Pacific Ocean, near 300 leagues in length, and in different places ten, twenty, thirty, and forty leagues wide. This peninſula is ſaid to have been firſt diſcovered by Sir Francis Drake, and by him called New Albion; and the Gulf of California has been ſometimes called The Vermillion Sea, or Purple Sea, or Red Sea. In a peninſula of ſo vaſt an extent, which reaches nearly from the 23d to the 46th degree of latitude, the ſoil and climate muſt naturally be found to vary. Some parts are continually covered with flowers, while others are inhoſpitable deſerts. According to father Bergert de Scheleſtat, it is nothing but a chain of barren rocks, covered with briers, without water, without wood, thinly inhabited, and incapable of culture; only the ſea coaſts having been diſcovered till 1788. The heat would be inſupportable, if not moderated in the afternoon by the eaſt wind, which blows but ſeldom, or by the ſouth, which is there more frequent. It rarely rains, and then only in ſmall quantities. The ſoil is naked rock, or covered with pebbles, fertile in ſome few places, which are watered. It ſeems to have been produced by a volcano or an earthquake; few fruit trees are found, ſome foreſt trees and underwood, towards the ſouth, are all that offer; Indian figs grow wild. Such was the account given; but newer obſervations and diſcoveries have found many places where the ſoil was excellent, and capable of culture; and it is reported, that vines grow naturally on the mountains; that the Jeſuits, when they reſided there, made wine enough to ſerve for the conſumption of Mexico, of an excellent quality, and in its taſte approaching to that of Madeira; that towards the north have been foreſts, abounding in game, wolves, bears, biſons, and an animal, which ſeems peculiar to the country, called taye: it is as large as a heifer, which it reſembles in the form of its body, but its head more like that of a deer, with horns like thoſe of a ram; the ſea coaſts abound with fiſh, and the pearl fiſhery is richer than either that of Panama or Ormuz. The borders of the gulf are marſhy, and ſome volcanoes are found; the interior country furniſhes moſt of the fruits natural to America; they gather a ſort of manna, which they think falls with the dew upon the leaves of trees where it thickens, aſſerted to be as white and ſweet as the moſt refined ſugar. Horſes, aſſes, horned cattle, hogs, goats, and other quadrupeds, have been introduced, and do not degenerate. The birds natural to the new world are found there, and ſome peculiar to the country. Peacocks, buſtards, geeſe, cranes, vultures, wild geeſe, ſea ravens, ſea mews, quails, nightingales, linnets, larks, &c. are found near the coaſts. The inſects are neither venomous nor numerous; turtles, oyſters, lobſters, and divers other ſhell-fiſh, are common along the coaſt. Divers nations or tribes inhabit the country, without acknowledging any chief. Each father is a prince over his own family, but his power ceaſes when the children are able to provide for themſelves. Each tribe has, nevertheleſs, ſometimes perſons appointed, who call aſſemblies, to divide the production of the earth, regulate the fiſheries, and to march at their head, if engaged in war. They owe their rank to the choice of their companions, but they are agents only, not princes. The ſhade of a tree ſerves them as a retreat during the day, and in the night they retire to their huts, built on piles at the ſide of rivers or ponds. Want of proviſion obliges them often to change their abode, and in ſevere winters they retire into caves. A girdle and piece of linen, which paſſes round the body, ſome ornaments for the head, and a chain of pearls, ſerve them for dreſs and finery; ſome inſert coloured feathers in holes, which they make in their ears and noſtrils; ſome bind their forehead with bands, like network, with which too they cover their arms, adorned with chains of pearls, like bracelets. Thoſe who live towards the north, where they have no pearls, dreſs their heads with ſhells. The women commonly wear a ſpecies of long robe, made of the leaves of palms; ſome wear nothing but a girdle. Theſe palm leaves are woven with art, and dyed of different colours, and of them they make baſkets, which hold their roots and their proviſions. The principal places are Santa Maria, St. Ignatio, St. Iſidoro, Loreto, St. Eſtevan, St. Xavier, St. Yago, Roſalio, St. Juan Guadalupe, and St. Joſeph.

CALLAO, a ſea-port town of South America, in Peru, ſituated on a river of the ſame name, near the Pacific Ocean. The road is one of the moſt beautiful, the largeſt, and ſafeſt in the South Sea. Two iſlands, named St. Lawrence and Callao, and the peninſula, which nearly reaches them, defend veſſels from the ſouth wind; towards the weſt and north it is open, but theſe winds never blow with violence; the ſea is always tranquil, the water is deep and without rocks. In the port every commodity is to be procured, which veſſels can ſtand in need of; the ſmall river furniſhes plenty of good water, and a mole, furniſhed with cranes, makes it eaſy to load and unload. The town was fortified by ten baſtions and ſome batteries, and defended by a garriſon. There are two fauxbourgs inhabited by Indians. In the year 1746, there were 4000 inhabitants, when the whole town was deſtroyed by an earthquake, the houſes and inhabitants were ſwallowed up, with nineteen veſſels, four of which were thrown a conſiderable way inland. Two hundred perſons only eſcaped this dreadful calamity; ſince that time, Callao has been rebuilt upon the ſame plan, but a little farther from the ſea. Long. 59. 10. W. Ferro. Lat. 12. 9. S.

CAMBOJA, Cambodia, or Camboya, a country of Aſia, bounded on the north by Laos, on the eaſt by Cochin-China and Chiampa, on the ſouth by the ſea, and on the weſt by Siam, about 135 leagues in length, and 50 in breadth. The air is exceedingly hot, which compels the inhabitants to reſide chiefly by the ſides of rivers or lakes, where they are tormented by muſkettoes. The ſoil is fertile, producing corn, rice, excellent legumes, ſugar, indigo, opium, camphor, and different medicinal drugs in abundance; raw ſilk and ivory are of little value. Gold, of great purity, amethiſts, hyacinths, rubies, topaſſes, and other precious ſtones, are found; cattle, of the cow kind, are exceedingly numerous, a tolerable good one may be purchaſed for a crown, and 140 pounds of rice for fourpence. Elephants, lions, tygers, and almoſt all the animals of the deſerts of Africa, are found there. Among the trees are the ſandal and eagle wood, and a particular tree, in the juice of which they dip their arrows; a wound given from one of the arrows, is ſaid to prove mortal, though the juice itſelf may be drank without danger. This country ſo rich by nature, is almoſt a deſert, the king being ſcarcely able to aſſemble 30,000 men. The inhabitants are a mixture of Japaneſe and Malays, with ſome Portugueze, who live without prieſts, and have intermarried with the natives. Their religion is idolatry; the men are in general well made, with long hair, and of a yellow countenance; their dreſs is a long and large robe, the dreſs of the women is ſhorter and cloſer; they are handſome but immodeſt. They manufacture exceeding fine cloth, and their needle work is much admired.

CAMBRIDGE, a town of England, ſituated on the river Cam, in a county to which it gives name, known in the time of the Romans by the name of Garanta. The town is divided into four wards, containing 13 pariſhes, and was incorporated in the year 1101, by Henry I. with a mayor, aldermen, recorder, &c. Its principal celebrity is owing to the univerſity, founded, in all probability, by Sigebert, king of the Eaſt Angles, in the year 630. The univerſity is governed by a chancellor, who may be elected every three years, or remain in office by conſent of the ſenate, with a vice-chancellor, commiſſary, and high ſteward. The chancellor's courts enjoy the ſole juriſdiction, in excluſion of the king's courts, over all civil actions and ſuits whatſoever, where a ſcholar, or privileged perſon, is one of the parties, except where the right of freehold is concerned. The vice-chancellor is annually choſen on the 4th of November, by the body of the univerſity, out of two perſons nominated by the heads of the colleges. Two proctors are alſo annually choſen, as alſo are two taxers, who, with the proctors, have cognizance of the weights and meaſures, as clerks of the market. The univerſity has a cuſtos archivorum, or regiſter, three eſquire beadles, one yeoman beadle, and two library keepers. The proctors viſit the taverns, and other public houſes, and have power to puniſh offending ſcholars, and to fine the public houſes who entertain them. Cambridge univerſity was, at firſt, in all probability, little more than a grammar-ſchool, and lay neglected during the Daniſh invaſions, but began to revive, after the government was ſettled by William I. It now contains 16 colleges: 1. Peter-houſe, founded in the year 1257, by Hugh Balſham, prior, afterwards biſhop of Ely. 2. Clare-hall, founded in the year 1326, by Richard Badew, chancellor of the univerſity, which being burnt, was rebuilt in the year 1342, by the aſſiſtance of Elizabeth de Burg, grand-daughter of Edward I. 3. Pembroke-hall, founded by Mary, third wife of Audomar de Valence, earl of Pembroke. 4. Corpus-Chriſti, or Bene't-college, formed by the union of two fraternities of Corpus-Chriſti, and the Bleſſed Virgin, about the year 1344, and brought to perfection by Henry, duke of Lancaſter. 5. Trinity-hall, founded in the year 1351, by William Bateman, biſhop of Norwich. 6. Gonville and Caius-college, firſt founded in the year 1348, by Edmund Gonville, rector of Terrington and Ruſhworth, in the county of Norfolk, and re-founded in the year 1557, by John Caius, phyſician to queen Mary, under the name of Gonville and Caius-college. 7. King's-college, firſt founded in the year 1441, by king Henry VI. but not completed till the reign of Henry VIII. 8. Queen's-college, founded in the year 1448, by Margaret of Anjou, wife of king Henry VI. but perfected by Elizabeth Grey, queen of Edward IV. 9. Catherine-hall, founded about the year 1474, by Robert Woodlark, third provoſt of King's-college. 10. Jeſus-college, founded in the year 1497, by John Allcock, biſhop of Ely. 11. Chriſt-college, founded in the year 1506, by Margaret, counteſs of Richmond, mother of Henry VII. 12. St. John's-college, founded alſo in the year 1509, by the counteſs of Richmond. 13. Magdalen-college, founded in the year 1542, by Thomas Audley, lord-chancellor, and further endowed by ſir Chriſtopher Day, lord chief juſtice. 14. Trinity-college, founded in the year 1546, by king Henry VIII. 15. Emanuel-college, founded in the year 1584, by ſir William Mildmay, chancellor of the exchequer to queen Elizabeth. 16. Sidney-Suſſex-college, founded in the year 1598, by the lady Frances Ratliff, counteſs of Suſſex. In theſe colleges are 406 fellowſhips, and 666 ſcholarſhips. Beſides the colleges, and 14 pariſh churches, other public buildings are the ſenate-houſe, the ſchools, and public library, Addenbrooke's hoſpital, and the ſhire-hall. Two members are returned by the univerſity to the Britiſh parliament, and two by the town: 17 miles S. Ely, and 51 N. London.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the north-weſt by Lincolnſhire, on the north by Norfolk, on the eaſt by Suffolk, on the ſouth by Eſſex and Hertfordſhire, and on the weſt by the counties of Bedford, Huntingdon, and Northampton, about 52 miles long, and 26 broad. It is divided into 17 hundreds, and contains one city (Ely), one univerſity (Cambridge), ſeven other market-towns, and 163 pariſhes. The market towns are Newmarket, Royſton, Linton, Wiſbeach, Caxton, Merſh, and Soham; Royſton is partly ſituated in the county of Herts. The principal rivers are the Ouſe and the Cam; the river Ouſe divides it nearly in the centre, croſſing it from weſt to eaſt; the northern part is chiefly compoſed of what is called the Iſle of Ely, conſiſting of fenny land, divided by innumerable channels, with a few elevated ſpots. All theſe low lands are naturally bogs, but have been, by infinite labour and expence, drained and converted into rich meadows, or fertile corn land; the air is unhealthy, and the water brackiſh, and, notwithſtanding all the care and pains taken, the lands are ſtill ſubject to inundations. The ſouth-weſt part of the county is more elevated, and the air is more pure; the ſouth-eaſt part is open and healthy, and but thinly inhabited. The principal productions of Cambridgeſhire are corn, cheeſe, butter, coleſeed, hemp, and ſaffron. In the fens are ſeveral decoys, in which incredible numbers of wild fowl are caught, and ſent to London, Cambridge, and other places. Six members are returned to the Britiſh parliament, viz. two for the county, and four for the town and univerſity of Cambridge.

CANADA, or Province of Quebec, a country of North America, bounded on the north by Hudſon's Bay, on the eaſt by Labrador, on the ſouth by Nova Scotia and the United States of America, and on the weſt by part of America, but little known. It extends from north-eaſt to ſouth-weſt about 700 miles in length, and about 200 in breadth. The climate is cold ; the winter long and ſevere. The ſituation would ſeem to promiſe a temperate air ; but the woods, the ſprings, mountains covered with ſnow, the northerly winds, an elevated ſoil, and a ſky almoſt always clear, are the ſuppoſed cauſes of the rigorous cold : nevertheleſs the ſoil is good, and many parts exceedingly fertile, producing excellent corn and vegetables. The ſummer is agreeable, and aſſiſts the richneſs of the ſoil : ſix weeks only are required from ſeed time to harveſt. The meadows are well watered, and covered with excellent graſs, which feed innumerable quantities of large and ſmall cattle. The mountains contain mines of coal, iron, and lead. The foreſts furniſh varieties of timber trees ; as white and red pines, and firs of every kind ; oaks, beeches, elms, cedars, cheſnuts, with many others unknown in Europe ; among the fruits are apples, plumbs, cherries, citrons, gooſberries, &c. The animals are buffaloes, ſtags, elks, bears, foxes, weaſels, ſquirrels, ferrets, martins, hares, beavers, porcupines, muſk-rats, &c. Among the birds may be reckoned buſtards, geeſe and ducks of various kinds, ſea parrots, cormorants, eagles, vultures, pelicans, ſwans, cranes, pheaſants, partridges, &c. Among the reptiles are rattleſnakes, and other ſpecies of ſnakes, ſome of which are harmleſs, and others whoſe bite is mortal : the lakes and rivers are numerous, and abound in fiſh, as ſalmon, eels, mackerel, herrings, ſhads, ſmelts, turbots, ſturgeons, trouts, mullets, &c. Canada is ſaid to have been firſt diſcovered in the year 1497, by John and Sebaſtian Cabot : the French were the firſt Europeans who ſettled in Canada, and eſtabliſhed themſelves there under the protection and government of France, till, in the year 1759, the country was taken by the Engliſh, and confirmed to them by the peace of 1763. It is divided into Upper and Lower Canada, ſeparated by the river Utawas, and an imaginary line ; the former lying ſouth-weſt of the latter. Quebec is the capital of Lower Canada, and indeed of all the country. Other principal towns are Montreal and Trois Rivieres. The principal town of Upper Canada is Kingſton : the principal rivers are St. Lawrence, Utawas, or Outawas, Montreal, Trois Rivieres, Deſpaires, Detroit, Saguenay, &c. The exports conſiſt in ſkins, furs, fiſh, wheat, flour, flaxſeed, pot-aſh, timber, &c. and the principal imports rum, brandy, ſugar, wine, tobacco, ſalt, &c.

CANAKAMPALEAM, a town of Hindooſtan, in the Myſore country : 12 miles E. Sattimungulum.

CANAL OF BRIARE IN FRANCE, was begun by Henry IV. to form a communication between the Seine and the Loire, from the town of Briare : at Montargis it is joined by the canal of Orleans, and in one ſtream falls into the Seine at Fontainebleau.

CANAL (Great), or Royal Canal of China, extends from north to ſouth through the empire, and united with ſeveral rivers in its courſe, ſerves to convey goods from Canton to Pekin, being only interrupted about one day's journey by a mountain, in the province of Kiang-ſi. This canal was made by order of Chi-tſou, chieftain of the weſtern Tartars, and founder of the twentieth dynaſty of Chineſe Emperors, and employed 30,000 men upwards of 40 years.

CANALS (Engliſh). It is of few years only that navigable canals have been introduced into England. The duke of Bridgewater ſeems to have ſet the example, in the year 1756. He originally intended and obtained an act of parliament to form a canal, for the purpoſe of carrying coals from his eſtate to Mancheſter ; by ſubſequent acts, it was extended farther. It begins at Worſley, about ſeven miles from Mancheſter, and four from Bolton, in Lancaſhire ; croſſing the Merſey, one branch turns to Mancheſter, and another to Altringham, in Cheſhire, and from thence to Preſton on the Hole, about 3 miles from Frodſham : a branch is alſo made from Bury, and another from Bolton, by which a communication is opened between thoſe towns and Mancheſter. From Aſhton under Line a cut is made to Mancheſter, which uniting with the Merſey, forms a communication between Stockport and Mancheſter. Since that time, numerous canals have been made in different parts of the kingdom, and acts are continually paſſing for others. The Staffordſhire Canal, or Grand Trunk, as it is called, forms a communication between the Merſey and the Trent, at a place called Wilden in Derbyſhire, by which means goods may eaſily be conveyed from the manufacturing towns of Lancaſhire, Cheſhire, and Staffordſhire, to the Humber, the German Ocean, and the northern parts of Europe. Another canal from near Bewdley forms a communication between the Severn and the Grand Trunk, near Stafford. Other canals are made to form a commmunication with the Grand Trunk, near Stafford, from Birmingham, Coventry, Oxford, Fazeley, Walſal, Wolverhampton, Wedneſbury, &c. There is a canal from Liverpool to Leeds, &c. ; a canal from Baſingſtoke, in Hampſhire, to the Thames, at Weybridge ; a canal from Andover, in Hampſhire, to the river near Southampton ; a canal from Lechlade to the Severn, between Glouceſter and Berkley, &c. &c.

CANALS OF FLANDERS, are numerous, and form a communication betwen Calais, St. Omer's, Dunkirk, Bergues, Bourbourg, Gravelines, Furnes, Nieuport, Oſtend, Bruges, Ghent, &c. with little interruption.

CANALS OF IRELAND. Grand Canal,—This branch of inland navigation commenced in 1756, under the direction of parliament, but after ſome years unfavourable efforts, encouragement was given to private ſubſcribers, who under the ſanction of the legiſlature, and a ſubſcription of 100,000*l.* proſecuted that work, being incorporated by the name of the " company of undertakers of the Grand Canal." They began in 1772, and after combating a variety of difficulties, and enlarging their capital, completed the line from Dublin to Monaſterevan in 1786. This canal proceeds from the weſt end of the metropolis, paſſes through Sallins, Robert's-town and Rathangan, to Monaſterevan, and from thence to Athy. It croſſes the river Liffey on an aqueduct bridge of ſeven arches, called the Leinſter aqueduct, which is diſtant 15 miles from Dublin, and ſituated between Callan's-bridge and Water's-town : it is built in 5 feet water, ſubject to violent floods that riſe to fifteen feet. The foundation is ſunk ſeven feet through ſand and gravel and large ſtones, to ſtrong blue clay: the whole river acroſs has the ſame ſtrata at equal depths. It was paſſable for boats in eighteen months from the day of laying the foundation, and coſt 7,500*l*. It is ſeventy-eight feet longer than the aqueduct Pont de Ceſſe, the largeſt canal of Languedoc. The Grand Canal afterwards pierces the hill of Downings ſeveral hundred yards, runs through a great part of the bog of Allen, and alſo paſſes over another aqueduct called the Griffith aqueduct, which lies over the Miltown river, about 23 miles from Dublin: this aqueduct is built with perforated cylinders, on piles and counterarches, in ſoft bog and marl. This canal joins the river Barrow at Monaſterevan, and is navigated by boats from thirty to fifty tons burden; and is ſupplied with water from numerous ſtreams and rivers particularly the Great Morrel, which is taken in at the fifteenth lock, about 12 miles from Dublin. Between Dublin and Monaſterevan there are twenty-ſix locks, viz. ſix double and twenty ſingle; the falls in which vary from four feet three inches to nineteen feet ſeven inches. The ſummit level is 202 feet four inches above the James's-ſtreet harbour; eighty-two feet nine inches above the river Barrow at Monaſterevan; and 265 feet above the tide in the Liffey at Dublin. The Leinſter and Griffith aqueducts, together with the entire line from Downings to Monaſterevan, and the bringing to its preſent ſtate of perfection, the whole of the Grand Canal, is due to the abilities and indefatigable labours of Richard Evans, eſq; who was engineer to the company.

Canal (Royal), this work is carried on by ſubſcription. The ſubſcribers were incorporated by charter, and farther powers lately granted by act of parliament, for carrying on a Canal from Dublin to the river Shannon, near Tarmonbury. One branch takes its riſe from Glaſſmanogue, county of Dublin; and the other from the river Liffey at the Lots. The two branches unite near Proſpect, on Glaſnevin road, paſs near Lucan, Leixlip, Carton, Kilcock, Kinnegad, Mullingar, &c. with off branches towards Trim, Kells, Athboy, and Caſtletown-delvin. One third of the expence being 66,000*l*. to be defrayed by parliament. Paſſage boats now ply from Dublin to Kilcock.

CANAL OF LANGUEDOC, in France. This canal was undertaken in the reign of Louis XIV. for the purpoſe of opening a communication between the Engliſh Channel and the Mediterranean. It begins at Cette, and joins the Garonne about a quarter of a league below Toulouſe.

CANAL OF ORLEANS, a canal of France, which begins at Orleans, and unites with the canal of Briare at Montargis.

CANAL OF PICARDY, a canal of France, which forms a communication between the rivers Somme and Oiſe. It begins at St. Quintin, in the department of the Aiſne, and joins the Oiſe near la Fere.

CANAL OF SCOTLAND (Great), this canal opens a communication between the rivers Forth and Clyde; and facilitates the conveyance of merchandize from Ireland, and the north-weſt parts of England to the German Ocean, the eaſt part of Scotland, and the northern parts of Germany, &c. and from the north-eaſtern parts of England to the Iriſh Sea and weſtern parts of Scotland, with much greater certainty and leſs danger than by the former courſe of navigation round the northern coaſt of Scotland.

CANAL OF VISCHNEI-VOLOGOK, a canal of Ruſſia, which forms a navigation from Peterſburg to Aſtrachan, a courſe of 1100 miles, paſſing by or near to Novgorod, Viſchnei-Vologok, Torjok, Tver, Moſkow, Kolo, Zalaiſk, Pronſk, Skopia, Rigjek, Tambov, Koperſk, Arkadinſkaia, Donſkaia, Tſchernoiyar, &c.

CANANDARQUE, a town of United America, in the ſtate of New York, on a ſmall lake to which it gives name: 25 miles S. from Lake Ontario.

CANANO, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Calabria Ultra: 2 miles SSE. Reggio.

CANANOR, a ſea-port town of Hindooſtan, on the coaſt of Malabar, built by Almeyda, the viceroy of Portugal, in the Eaſt Indies: it withſtood the armies of Calicut and Cananor when beſieged; but was taken by the Dutch in 1664, who have eſtabliſhed a factory there. The country furniſhes a large quantity of pepper, cardamoms, ginger, myrobolans, and tamarinds. It was taken by the Engliſh, under general Abercrombie, on the 17th of December, 1790: 15 miles NE. Tellicheri, and 100 WSW. Seringapatam. Long. 75. 14. E. Greenwich. Lat. 11. 55. N.

CANAPLES, a town of France, in the department of the Somme: 10 miles N. Amiens.

CANARA, a country of Aſia, belonging to the kingdom of Myſore; the length is near 60 leagues along the coaſt of the Indian Sea, its breadth from ten to thirty. The principal places are Mangalore, Barcelore, Onore, and Carwar.

CANARI, a town of the iſland of Corſica: 4 leagues NW. Baſtia.

CANARY, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Sandomirz: 16 miles W. Sandomirz.

CANARY ISLANDS, iſlands of Africa, in the Atlantic Ocean, the moſt eaſterly about 50 leagues from Cape Non. They are thirteen in number, ſeven of which are conſiderable, viz. Palma, Ferro, Gomera, Teneriff, Grand Canary, Forteventura, and Lancerota; the other ſix are very ſmall, Gracioſa, Roca, or Rocca, Allegranza, Sta. Clara, Inferno, and Lobos. They are ſuppoſed to have been known to the ancients under the title of the Fortunate Iſlands, but neglected till the beginning of the fifteenth century, when John de Betancourt, a gentleman of Normandy, took poſſeſſion of Forteventura and Lancerota for John, king of Caſtile, about the year 1404. By the treaty of peace between Ferdinand, king of Caſtile, and Alphonſo, king of Portugal, it was agreed, that theſe iſlands ſhould belong to Spain, in lieu of the ſettlements on the continent of Africa being ceded to Portugal. The firſt diſcovererers found neither corn or wine: at preſent there is plenty of both. It would be difficult, perhaps impoſſible, to aſcertain how theſe iſlands were firſt peopled, and whence the name of Canary is derived: ſome aſcribe it to the great number of dogs found there, from the Latin word canis: others from the Canaanites or Phœnicians, who viſited theſe iſlands: it is probable that the firſt inhabitants might have been Canaanites, but the opinion that the name ſhould have been thence given to the iſlands, ſeems rather fanciful than ſolid. Long. 12. to 17. 50. W. Greenwich. Lat. 27. 10. to 29. 50. N.

CANARY (Grand), the principal of the Canaries, which gives name to the whole, about ten leagues long, and ſix broad: the ſeat of government, veſted in a governor and three aſſeſſors, who exerciſe a ſovereign authority, and receive appeals from all the other iſlands; the middle part of the iſland is very mountainous, ſo that on one ſide it may blow a ſtorm, while on the other it is quite calm. The air is temperate; the inhabitants have two harveſts in a year. They cultivate ſugar canes, and vines from which they make wine called ſack, or Canary, of which they export great quantities: they have excellent fruits, ſuch as melons, pears, apples, figs, peaches of ſeveral kinds, and plantains. There are great plenty of horned cattle, ſtags, poultry, pigeons, and partridges: wood is ſcarce. The wheat and other corn is exceedingly good; the principal town is Palma, or Canary: other towns are Galder, Tirachana, and Luz.

CANARY, or Palma, the capital of the iſland of Grand Canary, the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Seville: the reſidence of the governor and ſovereign council of the Canaries, and a tribunal of the inquiſition. The town is a league in circumference, and contains about 12,000 inhabitants. Long. 15. 36. W. Greenwich. Lat. 28. 10. N.

CANASY CANCHES, or Tinta, a diſtrict or juriſdiction of South America, in Peru, which takes its name from Canches, part of the Cordillera mountains ſo called. It is called Tinta from the name of the principal town. CANDIA, a town of Italy in the Milaneſe: 12 miles W. Vercelli.

CANDIA, a large iſland in the Mediterranean, about 150 miles in length, and from 15 to 30 in breadth, belonging to the Turks; well known to the ancients under the name of Crete, which had once kings of its own; after which it became a Roman province. St. Paul planted Chriſtianity in this iſland, and Titus was the firſt biſhop: it continued with the emperors of the Eaſt till it was taken from Michael Balbus, by the Agarenians, a nation of Arabs, who had overrun Spain. From them it was taken by the emperor Phocas, and continued with the empire till the time of the cruſades, when it was given to Boniface, marquis of Montferrat, who was created king of Theſſalonica: by him it was ſold to the Venetians, who called it Candia, from a fortreſs built by the Arabs, and named Khandak, ſoftened into Candia, which they made the metropolis. The iſland flouriſhed under the wiſe government of the Venetian ſtate, till, in the year 1645, it was invaded by the Turks, and, after a brave defence, the town of Canea was compelled to ſurrender: but the city of Candia was not taken till 25 years after. The country abounds in corn and fruit trees: on the hills grow vines, which yield excellent wine. Other articles of commerce produced in the iſland are wool, oil, ſilk, honey, and wax. The inhabitants are chiefly Greeks; the government is intruſted to three pachas, with an army of about 15,000 men.

CANDIA, a town of the iſland of the ſame, founded by the Arabians, and called Khandak, from whence the Venetians formed Candia, a name which they gave to this place and the whole iſland. This city, after the reduction of Canea and great part of the iſland, ſtood a ſiege againſt the power of the Turks, from the year 1646 to 1670, when it was compelled to ſurrender, and with it the whole iſland, except three towns, Sude, Grabuge, and Spina Longa, which afterwards ſucceſſively fell into the power of the Turks. Long. 42. 54. CANTERBURY, a city of England, and capital of the county of Kent, the ſee of an archbiſhop, primate of all England, ſituated in a valley, between gently riſing hills, on the river Stour: founded before the Chriſtian era. It is a county of itſelf, and the magiſtrates have authority to determine all law-ſuits between the citizens, and to try for capital crimes committed within the city. The magiſtracy conſiſts of a mayor, aldermen, recorder, &c. It firſt returned members to the Britiſh Parliament in the reign of Edward I. There are two markets weekly, on Wedneſday and Saturday. Canterbury was formerly celebrated for its ſilk manufacture, which has for ſome years been on the decline; the principal manufactures are thoſe of worſted and Canterbury muſlins, made of ſilk and cotton. There were formerly ſeventeen churches within the walls, and three in the ſuburbs, fifteen only of which remain. The Jews have a ſynagogue; Methodiſts, Baptiſts, Preſbyterians, and Quakers, have each a place of public worſhip. The country round about produces a great quantity of hops. It is likewiſe celebrated for its brawn. In the cathedral was once the famous ſhrine of Thomas-a-Becket, who was murdered at the altar in the year 1170, to which pilgrims from all parts of the world continually flocked, having been canonized by pope Alexander, two years after his death, and only put a ſtop to by the reformation under Henry VIII. who took to himſelf the riches of the ſhrine, and ordered his name to be eraſed from among the ſaints: 56 miles E. CANTON, or Quang-tcheou, a city and ſea-port of China, and capital of the province of Quang-tong. One of the richeſt of the empire; by ſome ſaid to contain two millions of inhabitants. The immenſe quantity of money which foreign veſſels bring daily to this city, draws hither a continual crowd of merchants from all the provinces; ſo that one is ſure of finding in its warehouſes the rareſt productions of the ſoil, and the moſt valuable of the Chineſe manufactures. This city is, beſides, ſituated on a beautiful river, which has a communication by canals with all the neighbouring provinces: the entrance of it is called Hou-man, its banks, the plains which it waters, and even the hills which hang over it, are cultivated, and afford the moſt enchanting proſpect. The city is compoſed, as it were, of three different cities, ſeparated by lofty walls, but ſo conjoined, that the ſame gate ſerves to go out from the one and enter the other.—Theſe three cities united, almoſt form a regular ſquare; the ſtreets are long and ſtraight, paved chiefly with cut ſtone, and ornamented from ſpace to ſpace with triumphal arches; ſome of them are covered: theſe contain the richeſt ſhops. The houſes preſent nothing remarkable but great neatneſs; they conſiſt only of one ſtory, and have no windows to the ſtreet.—People of condition are carried here in chairs. The ſtreets are continually crowded, eſpecially with porters, who are all loaded, and have for the moſt part their heads, legs, and feet bare. There is no other convenience in this city for tranſporting goods from one place to another but men's ſhoulders. An infinite number of barks of all ſizes, which cover the river night and day, form a kind of floating city; they all touch one another, and are ranged ſo as to form ſtreets, the people who inhabit them are innumerable, and have no other dwelling: each bark lodges a family and their grand-children. At break of day all theſe people depart to fiſh, or cultivate their rice: 340 leagues S. Pekin. Long. 130. 35. E. Ferro. Lat. 23. 10. N.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE, a cape and ſettlement in the ſouthern extremity of Africa, in the country of the Hottentots, firſt diſcovered in the year 1487, by Bartholomew Diaz, who made ſome nautical obſervations, but did not land. He gave it the name of Cupo dos totos Tormentos, or Tormentoſo, on account of the ſtorms his veſſel met with near the coaſt; but Emanuel, king of Portugal, changed it to its preſent name on the return of Diaz. The Dutch, in their voyages to the Indies, uſed to land here to take in water and proviſions: the ſhips going out depoſited their letters in a caſe of iron, or lead, under a ſtone appointed for the purpoſe, which thoſe who returned exchanged for others, and conveyed the intelligence and circumſtances of their voyage to the different ports: John Van Riebeck a ſurgeon, and a man of abilities, firſt conceived the deſign of forming a fixed eſtabliſhment, which muſt be of great utility to his country at a place about an equal diſtance between their ſettlements in India and Europe, to afford ſhips refreſhments, ſtores, &c. His plan was adopted by the Dutch Eaſt India Company. Four ſhips were accordingly ſent out under the command of Riebeck, who acquired the friendſhip of the natives, and laid the foundation of the town now called Cape Town: every thing ſucceeded to his wiſh, and the colony encreaſed and proſpered: a bounty of ſixty acres of land was granted to every man who ſettled there, ſo that the whole is now of conſiderable extent, and forms ſix different eſtabliſhments. Some diſputes, however, in the year 1659, produced a war between the natives and the Dutch, concerning the boundaries of the latter. After the loſs of many lives, all animoſities were amicably concluded in about ten years, and they have lived in peace and quiet till the preſent time. The climate is favourable; the ſpring commences in October, the ſummer in January, the autumn in April, and the winter in July. The ſoil is good, and produces abundance of corn beyond the mountains. The country farther inland is much infeſted with beaſts of prey, ſuch as lions, tigers, leopards, wolves, &c. Game is plentiful, and the number of antelopes and deer prodigious. Among other ſpecies of animals, are the elephant, elk, rhinoceros, giraffa, &c. A great number of beautiful and rare birds have been found, as well as curious plants, by naturaliſts, who have made it their buſineſs to viſit the country for that purpoſe. In the month of September, 1795, the cape and town ſurrendered to an Engliſh fleet, under the command of admiral Sir George Elphinſtone, ſeconded by land forces under the command of major generals Clarke and Craig, on terms of capitulation, by one of which private property was to remain untouched. The loſs ſuſtained on the ſide of the Engliſh being only four men killed, and a few officers and men wounded. Long. 18. 30. E. Greenwich. Lat. 34. 24. S.

CAPE VERD ISLANDS, iſlands of Africa, in the Atlantic, ſo called from Cape Verd, oppoſite to which they are ſituated, or, according to ſome, from a green plant which grows in the ſea, near them, reſembling water-creſſes, and bearing a fruit ſomething like a gooſeberry. This plant, called ſargoſſo, is ſometimes found ſo thick as to impede veſſels in their courſe. As to their number, ſome reckon ten, others fourteen or more, by giving the name of iſlands to thoſe which are only rocks. They are in general mountainous; the lower hills are covered with a beautiful verdure, as well as the extenſive valleys between, but with little water, except what is found in ponds and wells. They are ſaid to have been, and probably were, known to the ancients, under the name of Gorgades, but not viſited by the moderns till the year 1449, when they were diſcovered by Antonio Nolli, a Genoeſe, in the ſervice of the Infant Don Henry, of Portugal. The air is extremely hot and unwholſome; it rarely rains, and the ground is ſo hot that one can hardly ſtand in places expoſed to the ſun. It is dangerous to paſs the night in the open air, for the great heat is often ſucceeded by a ſudden cold, which proves mortal to ſuch as are expoſed to it. The ſoil is for the moſt part ſtony and barren, nevertheleſs ſome parts produce rice, maize, bananas, lemons, oranges, citrons, pomegranates, figs, and melons; grapes are gathered twice a year. The manufacture of leather and ſalt form the principal riches. The inhabitants catch and ſalt a great number of turtles, which they ſend to America; they get ſlaves, ſugar, rice, cotton-ſtuffs, ambergriſe, civet, ivory, ſaltpetre, and gold, from the continent. When firſt diſcovered by the Portugueſe, they were almoſt uninhabited; by introducing ſlaves, black men and mulattoes have increaſed, but the Portugueſe are not numerous. Some of the iſlands are yet without inhabitants; all are under particular lords, who have furniſhed them with cows, goats, hogs, aſſes, mules, &c. Two of them, St. Yago and St. Philip, depend immediately on the king, and are the only ones that are fortified. The governor exerciſes a military power. The number of inhabitants is calculated at 100,000, but in the year 1771, 7000 were deſtroyed by the drought. Few whites are now ſeen: the influence of the climate has changed the ancient Portugueſe to negroes. The governor and prieſts are often negroes. They are ſituated about 130 leagues W. Cape Verd, and between the 15 and 18 degrees of N. lat.

CARDIFF, or Caerdiff, or Caer Diff, a town of South Wales, and county town of Glamorganſhire, ſituated on the river Taff, about three miles from the Severn: ſaid to have been built in the year 1080. The old walls are very conſiderable and extenſive. The inhabitants carry on a very conſiderable trade with Briſtol, and export a great quantity of caſt and wrought iron to London and other places, and the trade is moſt likely to increaſe, by means of a new navigable canal, formed from the iron works at Merthyr Tydvil, about 25 miles diſtant. Cardiff contains two pariſhes, but only one church, the other, with many houſes, having been undermined and deſtroyed by an inundation in the year 1607. This town was formerly the reſidence of princes, and the ſeat of juſtice. Robert Curthoſe, eldeſt ſon of William the Conqueror, was impriſoned and deprived of his ſight by order of his brother Henry I. within this caſtle, where he ended his days, after being a priſoner 26 years. The harbour, called Pennarth, is three miles down the river, but veſſels of 200 tons can come up to the town. It is an ancient corporation, and in conjunction with Cowbridge, Swanſea, and five other places, ſends one member to the Britiſh parliament. The aſſizes for the county, and the quarter ſeſſions are held here. Cardiff has two markets weekly, on Wedneſday and Saturday: 92 miles E. Haverford Weſt, and 164 W. London. Long. 3. 10. W. The town is large and populous, and was formerly ſurrounded with walls, and defended by a caſtle, now in ruins. It is a corporation and a borough town, returning with Aberyſtwith and Llanbeder, one member to the Britiſh parliament. It has a weekly market on Saturdays: 97 miles WNW. Monmouth, and 225 WNW. London. Long. 4. 42. W. Greenwich. Lat. 51. 59. N.—In the year 1136, a battle was fought here, between the Engliſh and Welch, in which the former were totally defeated leaving 3000 men dead on the field.

CARDIGAN BAY, a bay of the Atlantic, on the weſt coaſt of Wales, weſt and north-weſt of the town of Cardigan.

CARDIGANSHIRE, a county of South Wales, bounded on the north by the counties of Merioneth and Montgomery, on the eaſt by the counties of Radnor and Brecknock, on the ſouth by the counties of Caermarthen and Pembroke, and on the weſt by the Iriſh Sea; about 40 miles in length, 20 in breadth, and 100 in circumference. It contains five hundreds, ſix market-towns, and ſends two members to parliament, one for the county, and the other for the town of Cardigan, &c. The ſea has made great encroachments, even within the memory of man, and tradition ſpeaks of a well inhabited country, ſtretching far into the Iriſh Channel, which has been carried off by the ſea. Of an extenſive tract formerly celebrated for a hundred towns, nothing now remains but two or three miſerable villages, and a good deal of ground, in high eſtimation for barley, which is the regular crop without change or intermiſſion. Sea-weed is the manure made uſe of, and the quality of the grain is ſuch, that it is ſent to the adjacent counties for ſeed-corn. For at leaſt theſe ſixty years, it is ſaid that crops of barley have been annually taken from it, without any cauſe for complaining of a diminiſhed produce. This country may be properly divided into two diſtricts, the Lower and the Upland. Of the lower diſtrict, the higher grounds are in general a light ſandy loam, varying in depth, from a foot to four or five inches, the ſubſtratum a ſlaty kind of rock, producing, when judiciouſly treated, good crops of turnips, potatoes, barley, and clover; the ground in the valleys is very deep, and, with ſome exceptions, very dry, yielding good crops of hay for many years, without ſurface manure, which is ſcarcely ever thought on until it is exhauſted and becomes moſſy, and then it is turned up. The climate is much more mild than the midland counties of England. In this part of the country ſnow ſeldom lies long. There are in the neighbourhood of Cardigan, iron and tin works, eſtabliſhed about thirty years ago. Oats and butter are the chief articles of export. The ſoil of the upper diſtrict is various, owing to the unequal ſurface; in the vallies it is chiefly a ſtiff clay, with a mixture of a light loam. Barley and oats are the principal grain of the county. Wheat is commonly ſown; but in a leſs proportion than the other two. The principal towns are Cardigan, Llanbeder, Aberyſtwith, and Treganon; the principal rivers are the Tewy, or Tivy, the Yſtwith, and the Rheidol.

CARLSCRONA, a ſea-port town of Sweden, in the province of South Gothland, founded by Charles XI. in the year 1680, who removed the fleet from Stockholm to this place. The greateſt part ſtands upon a ſmall rocky iſland, which riſes gently in a bay of the Baltic; the ſuburbs extend over another ſmall rock, and along the mole cloſe to the baſon, where the fleet is moored. The way into the town from the main land is carried over a dyke to an iſland, and from thence along two wooden bridges, joined by a barren rock. The town is ſpacious, and contains about 18,000 inhabitants. It is adorned with one or two handſome churches, and a few tolerable houſes of brick; but the generality of buildings are of wood. The ſuburbs are fortified towards the land by a ſtone wall. The entrance into the harbour, which by nature is extremely difficult from a number of ſhoals and rocky iſlands, is ſtill further ſecured from the attack of an enemy's fleet by two ſtrong forts, built on two iſlands, under the batteries of which all veſſels muſt paſs. In the year 1714, a large dock was begun to be hollowed in the ſolid rock, and made large enough to receive ſhips of the largeſt ſize: this was finiſhed in ten years. The harbour is large and commodious, with depth of water ſufficient for ſhips of the firſt rate. The ſhips are built at Carlſcrona chiefly by Engliſh artiſans. Though the provinces of Blekinge and Skone abound with oaks, yet as there is not a ſufficiency for a continued ſupply, the Swedes procure their ſhip timber from Germany. They are ſupplied from their own territories with maſts and deals, pitch and tar, and the greateſt part of the flax uſed in the navy; and manufacture their own ropes and ſails from hemp, chiefly imported from Riga. They caſt their own cannon, and make their own gunpowder with Swediſh ſaltpetre. Long. 15. 30. E. Greenwich. Lat. 56. 10. N.

CARLSHAMN, or Carlſhaven, a ſea-port of Sweden, in the province of Bleſſingue, in the Baltic, built in the year 1658, by Charles X. Here is a woollen manufacture, and a forge for copper, and a timber-yard: 22 miles W. Carlſcrona.

CARMAGNOLA, a ſtrong town of Piedmont, in the marquiſate of Saluzzo. The word is ſuppoſed to be a diminutive of Carmagna, the name of a town near, as if called Little Carmagna; but the inhabitants of the neighbourhood aſſembling by little and little at Carmagnola, the latter became larger than the former; and, when Saluzzo had its particular marquiſes, Carmagnola gave the title of comte to their eldeſt ſons. In the war between the Imperialiſts and the French, the latter fortified Carmagnola with walls and ditches, and enlarged the citadel: they demoliſhed the fauxbourgs, which were too large, and made it one of the ſtrongeſt places on the frontiers of Piedmont. After the deſtruction of the fauxbourgs, four others were built, as large as the former, but 500 paces from the town; they are well peopled, and divided into four pariſhes. Carmagnola has only one pariſh within the walls; the whole number of inhabitants of the town and fauxbourgs is computed at 6500. The market is very much frequented, not only by the Piedmonteſe, but alſo by the inhabitants of Dauphiny, Nice, and the country of the Geneveſe: 11 miles SSE. Turin, and 13 NNE. Saluzzo. Long. 25. 20. E Ferro. Lat. 44. 42. N.

CARMONA, a town of Spain, in the province of Andaluſia: it was known to the ancients by the name of Carmo, and was eſteemed by Cæſar one of the ſtrongeſt towns in the country. It received the title of city from Philip IV. after the inhabitants had made him a preſent of 40,000 ducats: it is now without defence: 33 miles NE. Seville, and 40 SW. Cordova.

CARMULLA, a town of Hindooſtan, in the ſubah of Dowlatabad: 70 miles N. Viſiapour, and 88 E. Poonah. Long. 75. 22. E. Greenwich. Lat. 18. 40. N.

CARNABAT, a town of European Turkey, in the province of Romania: 50 miles W. Burgas.

CARNAHORA, s town of Poland, in the palatinate of Red Ruſſia: 60 miles S. Halicz.

CARNAL MANAZAL, a town of Arabia: 40 miles ESE. Mecca.

CARNAMART, a river of Ireland, which runs into Galway Bay, 12 miles W. Loughrea.

CARNATIC, a country of Hindooſtan lying along the coaſt of Coromandel, from Cape Comorin, in latitude 8. to 16. north: 408 miles in length, and from 40 to 100 in breadth. It is bounded on the north by the country of Golconda, on the eaſt by the bay of Bengal, and on the weſt by the Myſore, Dindigul, and Travancore. It anciently compriſed the greater part of the Myſore. The revenue of the nabob is ſtated at about a million and a half ſterling, per annum; out of which he pays 160,000l. per annum, to the Eaſt India company, towards the expence of their military eſtabliſhment. The evils attendant on the improvident conduct of the nabob, were ſeverely felt during the late war, and ought to be cautiouſly guarded againſt for the future. The Britiſh poſſeſſions in the Carnatic are confined chiefly to the tract called the Jaghire, which extends along the coaſt about 108 Engliſh miles, and 47 inland, in the wideſt part. Its annual revenue is eſtimated at 150,000l. Beſides the Jaghire, there are lands dependent on Cuddalore; but the amount is not conſiderable. The whole amount of the land revenue dependent on Madras, including the circars, has been ſtated at 725,000l. per annum. The country of Ongole, Cuddapore, Tanjore, Marawara, Madura, and Tinevelly, are included in the Carnatic. The principal towns are Arcot, Madras, Ongole, Pondicherry, Cuddalore, Tanjore, Tritchinopoly, Madura, and Tinevelly. The principal rivers are the Pennar, the Paliar, and the Cauvery.

CARNICOBAR, a ſmall iſland in the Indian Sea, north of the Nicobar Iſlands. Long. 93. 18. E. Greenwich. Lat. 9. 11. N.

CARNIOLA (Duchy of), a country of Germany, in the circle of Auſtria, bounded on the north by Stiria and Carinthia, on the eaſt by Dalmatia and Croatia, on the ſouth by Iſtria and the Adriatic, and on the weſt by the country of Goritz, Friuli, and the Adriatic. It meaſures in its greateſt extent 120 miles from eaſt to weſt, and 100 from north to ſouth. It is for the moſt part mountainous; ſome of the mountains are covered with wood, others are naked, many of them have their tops continually covered with ſnow. There are, however, many fruitful vallies and fields, which yield not only good paſturage, but excellent corn, hemp, flax, and millet. Here are likewiſe found vines, from which is made an excellent wine both white and red; cheſnuts, walnuts, olives, oranges, citrons, lemons, pomegranates, granates, almonds, figs, &c. Horned cattle and horſes are bred in great plenty, with all ſorts of veniſon and fowl. The mountains yield iron, lead, and copper. It is reckoned to contain fifty-ſix towns, 200 citadels, and 4000 villages. The common people are of Sclavonian origin, but the nobility are for the moſt part Germans. The two principal languages in Carniola are the Sclavonic and the German. Moſt of the inhabitants are Roman Catholics. The exports from Carniola are iron, ſteel, quickſilver, white and red wine, olive oil, cattle, ſheep, cheeſe, linen, a kind of woollen ſtuff called Mahalan, Spaniſh leather, honey, ſhip timber,, and all manner of wood work, as boxes, diſhes, ſpoons, ſieves, &c. Towards the maintenance of the military power of the houſe of Auſtria, Carniola contributes yearly 363,171 florins and fifty-ſix kruitzers. The duchy of Carniola is divided into Upper Carniola, of which Laybach is the capital; Lower Carniola, the principal town of which is Gurckfeld, or Kerſko; Middle Carniola, the capital of which is Gottſchee: Inner Carniola, of which Duin, or Tybein, is the chief town; and Auſtrian Iſtria, including the county of Mitterberg, the ſigniory of Caſtua, the territory of Idria, the territory of Tolmino, the county of Goritz, the county of Gradiſca, and the territory of Aculega. The principal rivers are the Sau, the Laybach, the Gurk, and the Culpa.

CAROLINA (North), a country of the United States of America, bounded on the north by Virginia, on the eaſt by the Atlantic Ocean, on the ſouth by South Carolina and the ſea, and on the weſt by the Tennaſee government; is in length 385 miles from eaſt to weſt, and from 90 to 150 broad from north to ſouth. The charter limits give it a greater extent, and include the Tennaſee as far as the river Miſſiſippi; which would make the length 350 miles more, or 735 in the whole. It is divided into eight diſtricts, and ſubdivided into fifty-eight counties. The country eaſtward and to the ſouth is uniformly flat and level; towards the north-weſt a continuation of the Apalachian mountains covers a part of the ſtate, and forms a diviſion between it and the Tennaſee country: the weſtern and hilly parts are healthy; the country is fertile, and well watered by ſome large and a great number of ſmaller rivers: the ſummers are very hot in the day, but the nights are cool: the winters are generally mild: in the flat country the air is leſs healthy, intermitting fevers, attended with bilious and nervous complaints, are more frequent in the ſummer, and pleuriſies in the winter; but both heightened by intemperance and want of care. The productions are wheat, rye, barley, oats, flax, Indian corn, and pulſe of every kind, tobacco, cotton, and hemp. Among the trees are the pitch pine, which grows almoſt every where in the plain country, yielding pitch, tar, and turpentine, beſides timber for various purpoſes; white and red oaks for ſtaves, black oaks, cypreſs and bay trees; the leaves of the latter are given to cattle for winter food. The chief fruits are plumbs, grapes, and ſtrawberries: among the roots and plants are ginſeng, ſnake root, lions heart, a remedy for the bite of a ſerpent, ſeveral ſpecies of the Mimoſa, and ground peas, which run along the earth, and being covered with the mould by the hand, the pods grow under the ground, and are eaten raw or roaſted, reſembling in taſte the hazel nut. In the year 1710, the number of inhabitants in this ſtate was computed at 6000; in the year 1791, they were numbered 393,751, of whom 293,179 were citizens. The exports amounted, in the year 1791, to 524,548 dollars. Their chief trade is with the other ſtates of America and the Weſt Indies. They carry out tobacco, wheat, Indian corn, tar, pitch, reſin, boards, ſtaves, ſhingles, furs, beef, pork, tallow, bees-wax, &c.; receiving from the other ſtates flour, cheeſe, cyder, apples, potatoes, iron wares; and from the Weſt Indies rum, ſugar, and coffee. The principal rivers are the Chowan, the Roanoke, the Pamlico, or Tar, the Nuſe, and the Cape Fear, or Clarendon. The principal capes are Cape Fear, Lookout, and Hatteras. The principal towns are Newbern, Edenton, Wilmington, Halifax, Hillſborough, and Fayetteville; each in their turns have been conſidered as the capital of the ſtate. At preſent, they have no capital. The convention, which met to conſider the new conſtitution, fixed on a place in Wake County to be the ſeat of government, but the town is not yet built. Long. 75. 55. to 83. 40. W. Greenwich. Lat. 33. 50. to 36. 30. N.

CAROLINA (South), a country of the United States of America, bounded on the north and north-eaſt by north Carolina, on the ſouth-eaſt by the Atlantic Ocean, and on the ſouth-weſt by Georgia; extends in length 200 miles from eaſt to weſt, and from the boundaries of North Carolina, to the mouth of the river Savannah 180 miles, from north to ſouth; but this is only the point of a triangle, 120 being its main breadth. It is divided into ſeven diſtricts, and ſub-divided into thirty-five counties. The whole ſtate, from the ſea-coaſt, is a level, till, at the diſtance of about eighty miles, it riſes gradually, but hardly ſo as to be called mountainous, till near the northweſt extremity where it is croſſed by a part of the Apalachian mountains. Along the ſea-coaſt bilious, intermitting and remitting fevers are very frequent, eſpecially in the ſummer months, cauſed by the noxious exhalations from the ſwamps and marſhy lands, and ſtagnated waters on the rice plantations, the great heat of the day, and the coolneſs of the nights; frequently aggravated by intemperance and want of care. The weſtern parts are beautifully varied with hills and vallies; the air is more temperate, and the climate more wholeſome. The ſoil of this ſtate may be divided into four kinds; firſt, the pine barren, which is valuable only for its timber. Interſperſed among the pine barren, are tracts of land free of timber, and every kind of growth but that of graſs. Theſe tracts are called ſavannahs, conſtituting a ſecond kind of ſoil good for grazing. The third kind is that of the ſwamps and low grounds on the rivers, which is a mixture of black loam and fat clay, producing naturally canes in great plenty, cypreſs, bays, loblolly, pines, &c. In theſe ſwamps rice is cultivated, which conſtitutes the ſtaple commodity of the ſtate. The high lands, commonly known by the name of oak and hiccory lands, conſtitute the fourth kind of ſoil. The natural growth is oak, hiccory, walnut, pine, and locuſt trees. On theſe lands, in the low country, Indian corn is principally cultivated; and, in the back country, beſides this, they raiſe tobacco in large quantities, wheat, rye, barley, oats, hemp, flax, cotton, and ſilk. The fruits which flouriſh beſt are figs, peaches, and pears; there are a few lemons, and pomegranates; melons are plentiful, and excellent; apples are ſcarce. The principal exports of South Carolina are rice, indigo, ſkins, cotton, pitch, tar, reſin, turpentine, cedar wood, ſnake root, ſarſaparilla, lumber, ſhingles, ſtaves, hides, &c. In the year 1791, the number of the inhabitants amounted in the whole, free and otherwiſe, to 249,173. The principal rivers are the Savannah, the Santee, the Eddiſto, and the Pedee. The principal towns are Charleſtown, Beaufort, Georgetown, Columbia, Camden, and Puriſburg. Long. 78. 30. to 83. W. Greenwich. Lat. 32. to 35. N.

CARTHAGENA, a ſea-port town of Spain, founded by the Carthaginians, deſtroyed by the Goths, and rebuilt by Philip II. The harbour is the beſt in Spain. Andrew Doria was wont to ſay he knew but three good ports, which were June, July, and Carthagena. It is ſituated in the province of Murcia, at the bottom of a ſmall bay in the Mediteranean. This bay abounds in mackerel, ſo much that a ſmall iſland at the entrance of the harbour is from thence called Scombraria. It is the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Toledo. The neighbouring country produces great quantities of ruſhes, called ſparta, from whence the town itſelf received the name of Spartaria, and the country that of Spartarius Campus. Diamonds, rubies, amethyſts, and other precious ſtones, are found here. It was a long time the Indies of the Romans, and there are ſtill ſilver mines in the environs. The harbour is ſpacious, and ſo deep that ſhips may moor cloſe to the land. It is a baſon hollowed by nature, which ſeems to have ſheltered it from the winds, by ſeveral hills, placed round it at equal diſtances, ſo that from the mole nothing but the entrance of the harbour and baſon are to be ſeen. No port in the world can be compared to this for ſafety and regularity. The entrance is defended by two redoubts, the mole is protected by twelve pieces of cannon. The arſenal is extremely large, and provided with every thing that can facilitate the building and fitting out of a ſhip. Every requiſite is there in ſuch readineſs, that a ſhip of the line may be got ready for ſea in three days. To Carthagena, the Engliſh, Dutch, and Neapolitans carry merchandize of all kinds, and return loaded with ſilk, wool, pot-aſh, and barilla; 25 miles SSE. Murcia, and 145 SSW. Valencia. Long. 15. 38. E. Peak of Teneriffe. Lat. 37. 35. N.

CARTHAGENA, a province of South America, in the country of Terra Firma, bounded on the north by the Caribbean Sea, on the eaſt by the river St. Martha, on the ſouth by a part of Terra Firma, and on the weſt by the ſea and the Gulf of Darien. The country is compoſed of mountains and vallies, covered with large and ſmall foreſts. The variety of plants and trees, as well as fruits, is wonderful, the earth is covered with perpetual verdure. Wheat and other grain of Europe do not flouriſh well, but Indian corn and rice are raiſed ſufficient for the conſumption of the inhabitants. The climate is very hot; from May to December is almoſt a continual ſucceſſion of rain and tempeſt; the principal trees for ſize are the caobo, or acajou, the cedar, the maria, and the balſam-tree. Here are alſo tamarind trees, medlars, ſapotes, papayo, caſſia-fiſtula, and manchineel trees; the latter is remarkable for its poiſonous fruit, it is even dangerous to lie under the tree, as the droppings of rain from the leaves will produce inflammation whereever it touches. There are ſeveral ſpecies of the palm; guaiacum and ebony trees are equally common; and ſenſitive plants are found in great varieties. The only tame animals here are cows and hogs, the fleſh of the latter is ſaid to exceed thoſe of Europe, while that of the former is dry and unpalatable, as they cannot be fattened for the heat of the climate. Nothing can ſurpaſs the variety and beauty of the birds; poultry, pigeons, partridges, and geeſe are good and plentiful. There are great quantities of deer, wild boars, foxes, tygers, armadilloes, ſquirrels, rabbits and an innumerable variety of monkies. Snakes, vipers, centipes, and other poiſonous reptiles are very common. Plantations of ſugar-canes and cotton-trees abound here, and the chocolate made from the cocoa-trees, which grow here, is eſteemed even ſuperior to that of the Caraccas. The fruits peculiar to the country are pine-apples, popayas, plantains, &c. The principal town is Carthagena.

CARTHAGENA, a city and ſea-port of South America, and capital of the province of the ſame name in the country of Terra Firma. The bay and the country round Carthagena, anciently called Calamari, were diſcovered by Roderigo de Baſtidas, but the conqueſt thereof, by ſeveral ſucceeding adventurers, met with more reſiſtance than was expected. The Indians being naturally a warlike people, the very women ſhared in defending the country. Their uſual arms were bows and arrows, the points of which they poiſoned with the juice of certain herbs, whence the ſlighteſt wounds were mortal. Gregorio Hernandez de Oviedo being, like ſeveral of his predeceſſors, baffled in repeated attempts, the conqueſt of the place, the peopling of the city, and reducing it into a colony and government was completed by Don Pedro de Heredia, in 1583. From ſeveral natural advantages, particularly that of its fine ſituation, it was raiſed into an epiſcopal ſee. The promiſing advantages of its ſituation ſoon excited the envy of foreigners, particularly the French, who invaded it under the conduct of a Corſican pilot, in 1544. The ſecond invader was Sir Francis Drake, who after pillaging it, ſet it on fire; but it was happily reſcued from the flames by a ranſom of 120,000 ducats, paid him by the neighbouring colonies. It was invaded and pillaged a third time by the French, under Monſ. de Pointis, in 1697. In the year 1741, it was beſieged by the Engliſh, but from a miſunderſtanding between the commanders, and a diſeaſe among the troops, the enterprize was abandoned. The city is ſituated on a ſandy iſland, which forming a narrow paſſage on the ſouth-weſt, opens a communication with that part called Tierra Bomba; as far as Bocca Chica on the north ſide, the land is ſo narrow, that before the wall was begun, the diſtance from ſea to ſea was only thirty toiſes, but afterwards the land enlarging, by means of the wall, it forms another iſland on this ſide, and the whole city is, excepting theſe two places, which are very narrow, entirely ſurrounded with water. Eaſtwards it communicates by means of a wooden bridge, with a large ſuburb, built on another iſland, which communicates with the continent by another wooden bridge. Carthagena, together with its ſuburbs, is equal to a city of the third rank in Europe. It is well peopled, though moſt of its inhabitants are deſcended from the Indian tribes. As no mines are worked here, moſt of the money ſeen in this part is ſent from Santa Fé and Quito, to pay the ſalaries of the governor, officers, and garriſon. Carthagena bay is one of the beſt in this country. It extends 2½ leagues from north to ſouth, and has ſafe anchorage, though the many ſhallows at the entrance make a careful ſteerage neceſſary. The entrance into the bay was through the narrow ſtrait of Bocca Chica, or Little Mouth, which, ſince the invaſion of the Engliſh, has been ſhut up, and a more commodious one opened and fortified. Towards Bocca Chica, and 2½ leagues diſtant ſeawards, is a ſhoal of gravel and coarſe ſand; on many parts of which there is not above a foot and a half of water. The climate is very hot. From May to November, which is the winter here, there is almoſt a continual ſucceſſion of thunder, rain, and tempeſts; ſo that the ſtreets have the appearance of rivers, and the country of an ocean; from this otherwiſe ſhocking inconvenience they ſave water in reſervoirs, as the wells only ſupply them with a thick, brackiſh ſort, not fit to drink. From December to April is here the ſummer, in which there is ſo invariable a continuation of exceſſive heat, that perſpiration is profuſe to a degree of waſte; whence the complexions of the inhabitants are ſo wan and livid, that one would imagine them but newly recovered from a violent fit of ſickneſs. Yet they enjoy a good ſtate of health, and live even to eighty and upwards. The ſingularity of the climate occaſions diſtempers peculiar to the place: the moſt ſhocking is the fever, attended with the black vomit, which moſtly affects ſtrangers, and rages among the ſeamen; it laſts about three or four days, in which time the patient either recovers or dies. Long. 58. 5. CASBIN, or Kaſwin, a city of Perſia, in the province of Irak Agemi, ſituated in a vaſt ſandy plain, three leagues weſt from the higheſt branch of Mount Tauris. It was once two leagues in circumference, and contained 12,000 houſes, but from the civil wars of the country, it was ſo reduced that Mr. Hanway counted no more than 1000. The beautiful palaces are in ruins, the walls are deſtroyed, and it has neither forts or garriſon to defend it. The ſituation is advantageous, in many reſpects, for commerce, being open to Georgia, Adirbeitzan, and the Caſpian Sea. In the neighbourhood are found yellow orpiment and copper ore. Among other fruits, the inhabitants cultivate a ſpecies of grapes, which are tranſparent; they make a very ſtrong wine of ſome, and others, dried by the ſun, are ſent to all the provinces of the country: 240 miles NNW. The water is ſalt, and of an ochre colour, without ebb or flow. Though in ſome places it is exceedingly deep, yet it abounds in ſhallows, ſo as to prevent the navigation of ſhips which draw more than nine or ten feet water. The fiſheries there, which are very valuable, occupy and train many ſeamen. The Coſacks of Ural poſſeſs theſe fiſheries on their coaſts for the ſpace of 32 verſts, on both banks of the river Ural; and the inhabitants of Aſtracan poſſeſs all the reſt belonging to Ruſſia. Among other fiſh are ſturgeon and beluga, whoſe eggs furniſh abundance of what the Ruſſians call caviare, a kind of diſh, of which they are very fond; the dry and ſalt fiſh alſo form a very important article in the diet of the Ruſſians. The Caſpian Sea likewiſe abounds with ſea hogs, whoſe fleſh the Coſacs eat, and from which they extract oil in conſiderable quantities. The coaſts are divided among the Ruſſians, Perſians, and Tartars.

CELANO, a river of Italy, which runs into the Gulf of Tarento, 3 miles from Roſſano.

CELEBES, an iſland in the Eaſtern Indian Ocean, about 500 miles long, and 200 broad. It is ſituated under the equator, between the iſland of Borneo and the Spice Iſlands. The heat, which would otherwiſe be exceſſive, is moderated by the abundant rains which fall, as they ſay, regularly ſome days before and after the full moon. The vapours which riſe from the mines of gold and copper, and thoſe which are cauſed by the alternate rain and heat, would render the air very unwholſome, if the north winds did not frequently purify it: theſe winds produce terrible tempeſts and thunder. In the centre of the iſland are mountains, almoſt inacceſſible, in which are found quarries of excellent ſtone and marble, mines of gold, copper, and tin. Some of the provinces are covered with trees, ebony, ſandal, and other woods uſed for dying; carpenters-wood is very common, and bamboos of a ſize fit for boats. The trees are always green, fruit and flowers in all ſeaſons, jaſmines, roſes, carnations, and other beautiful flowers, grow without culture; orange-trees and citrons ſhade the plains, with mangoes, bananas, and other fruits; cotton-trees cover the extenſive plains. It produces no ſpice except pepper: the inhabitants raiſe a great number of cattle; the oxen are larger than thoſe of Europe. In the foreſts are large herds of deer, wild hogs, and a great variety of monkies, large and ferocious; ſome with tails, and ſome without; ſome walking upon their four legs, others upon two; the largeſt and moſt dangerous are the white, eſpecially to women, whom they ſeize and tear to pieces. The chief enemies of the monkies are ſerpents, which are continually in purſuit of them; the larger ſwallowing them whole; the ſmaller employ art and cunning to enſnare them; perched upon a tree, they make a hiſſing noiſe, which draws the curious apes to find the cauſe, when the ſerpent ſuddenly ſeizes on his prey, and drinks his blood. Anciently, the inhabitants conſidered the ſun and the moon as their gods; at preſent, they pretend to be Mahometans. No place is furniſhed with a greater variety of poiſons, and the natives, it is ſaid, ſtudy which will have the moſt ſpeedy operation. Their darts, which are dipt in poiſon, give inſtant death. Travellers ſay, that even if a limb be cut off immediately after the wound is received, it will not ſave the patient's life. The Dutch have fortified this iſland, as a barrier againſt all nations that may attempt to viſit the other iſlands where cloves and nutmegs grow. The principal articles which the Dutch obtain from this iſland, are rice, gold, ivory, deals and ſandal wood; cotton, camphor, ginger, long pepper, and pearls; they carry thither ſcarlet cloth, gold and ſilver ſtuffs, linens of Cambray, tin, copper, iron, ſoap, and aſſafœtida. This iſland is alſo called Macaſſar, from a town of that name in the ſouthern part of the iſland. Long. 118. 40. to 124. 15. E. Greenwich. Lat. 1. 20. N. to 5. 40. S.

CEVA, a city and fortreſs of Italy, in the principality of Piedmont, and comté of Aſti, ſituated on the Tanaro, the capital of a marquiſate, in a plain, ſurrounded on all ſides with hills, at the extremity of the country, which extends from the Appenines to the Tanaro, and from thence to the northern part of the Maritime Alps. It was anciently celebrated for its cheeſe, made of ewes-milk. This cheeſe, called by the Italians Rubiola, is much eſteemed even now, and ſold not only into Piedmont and the Milaneſe, but other parts more diſtant. The hills about Ceva likewiſe produce excellent wine: great quantities of cheſnuts grow at the foot of the mountains, and excellent truffles are found in the neighbouring plains. It was formerly an independent ſtate, but a great part of the domain was ſold to the town of Aſti, in 1295, whence, in the year 1531, it came to the houſe of Savoy. It was beſieged by the French in 1543, but the enemy were compelled to retire without ſucceſs. A ſudden inundation, on the 6th of July, 1584, beat down great part of the walls, deſtroyed the bridges, houſes, and churches, and drowned a great number of the inhabitants; and, in the year 1625 and five following years, a peſtilential diſeaſe carried off the greater part of the ſurvivors. It has one collegiate church, and three convents: 40 miles W. Genoa, and 25 SSE. Turin. Long. 25. 37. E. Ferro. Lat. 44. 20. N.—It was taken by the French, in the month of April, 1796.

CEUTA, a ſea-port town of Africa, on the ſouth coaſt of the Mediterranean, in the kingdom of Fez, belonging to Spain, with a good harbour for ſmall veſſels, the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Liſbon. This town was taken from the Moors in the year 1409, by John, king of Portugal, and continued annexed to that crown till the revolution, in the year 1640, when it fell to Spain, and was finally ceded to that country by the treaty of Liſbon, in the year 1688. It withſtood a vigorous ſiege againſt the Moors in 1697: it is ſituated in the narroweſt part of the Mediterranean, not above five leagues from Gibraltar. Long. 5. 25. W. Greenwich. Lat. 35. 48. N.

CEYLON, an iſland in the Indian ſea, ſituated to the ſouth-eaſt of the peninſula of India, from which it is ſeparated by a narrow ſea, about ſixty miles wide; of an oval form, eighty leagues from north to ſouth, and where wideſt forty-five from eaſt to weſt. This iſland is called by the Arabians Serendib. Nothing of certainty was known of this iſland before the twelfth century, when it was diſcovered by the Portugueſe, who traded and become very powerful till the middle of the 17th century, when the Dutch arrived, and by their means the Portugueſe were expelled. The iſland is exceedingly fertile, produces ſeveral kinds of rice, and all the fruits of the Indies, but the moſt valuable production is that of cinnamon; the beſt ſort of which grows only here. Other productions are ginger, pepper, cardamoms, ſugar, cotton, mangoes, long pepper, &c. Among the trees is one called the talipot, the trunk of which reſembles a large maſt crowned with long leaves at the top, one of which is ſaid to be of ſufficient magnitude to cover fifteen perſons; with theſe they make tents, and cover their houſes; this tree bears neither flower nor fruit till it is old: of the pith the inhabitants make cakes which has the taſte of bread. The ketute has leaves like a cotton-tree, the bark, which is very hard, divides into threads, of which they make ropes. The trunk is ſtraight, weak, and of a moderate height, the wood is black, heavy, compact, and ſubject to ſplit: by wounding the trunk the inhabitants obtain a liquor refreſhing, agreeable, and wholeſome, but intoxicating. The bogaha is a large tree with broad hanging leaves, continually in motion. The inhabitants of the iſland hold this tree in great veneration, placing their idols under them, and ſuppoſe them to be the reſidence of the god Buddou, or Baouth. The gorunda-gouhah is a tree which bears the cinnamon. This tree, which is about the ſize of an olive, has leaves like the lemon or laurel-tree, but not ſo broad, and bears white fragrant bloſſoms, and a yellowiſh fruit, like a ſmall olive, from which they preſs oil like that of nutmegs. The young leaves are red, and bruiſed ſmell like cloves. It has a double bark. Of the outer they make curious cabinets. The inner rind they peel off the tree, and cutting it in ſquare pieces lay it abroad in the fields, where it changes its aſh colour, and ſhrinks up into the ſmall rolls as we find our cinnamon. After the trees are thus peeled, they are let alone for three years, when it is ſaid they regain their coats. The wood is very white, and uſed for building. While green they diſtil out of it a wholeſome well ſcented liquor, and another from the root which ſmells like the ſtrongeſt camphor. The fineſt ſort of cinnamon is taken from the youngeſt, or of a middle growth. Here is a coarſer ſort taken from thick old trees, and a baſtard ſort, which grows wild, like that on the Malabar coaſt, but of no value. The fruit of the cinnamon tree, which is ripe in September, is like an acorn, but not ſo fragant as the bark; and boiled it makes a hard white ointment, like tallow, but of better ſmell, which they uſe for aches, and burn in lamps. Here are alſo ſnake-wood, betel-nuts, and jackes, whoſe kernels are like cheſnuts, and ſerve inſtead of rice when ſcarce. A tree yielding a white thick glutinous ſubſtance, which is uſed for birdlime, and when mixed with rice-flour, taſtes like eggs. The root-tree, whoſe branches turn like ropes to the ground, where they take freſh root, and another ſprings from thence, and ſo on, overſpreading large tracts, after the manner of the bannian-tree. Among the animals may be reckoned buffaloes, hogs, goats, deer, bears, tygers, monkies, jackals, and elephants, which latter are reckoned the moſt valuable of the Indies. Here are ſeveral ſpecies of ants, which devour almoſt every thing they come near, and build up hills with ſo much firmneſs as ſcarcely to be levelled with pickaxes; the poultry feed on them. Bees are of ſeveral ſorts. Among the birds are peacocks, parrots, a black bird called carlos, as large as a ſwan, which never lights on the ground, but always ſits on trees, with ſhort legs, large head, and long bill; partridges, wood-cocks, ſnipes, ſparrows, &c. Many ſerpents are found here, ſome of which are ſaid to be of an uncommon ſize. Here are mines of gold, ſilver, and other metals, but only thoſe of iron are permitted to be wrought. Precious ſtones are found of ſeveral ſorts, as ſapphires, topazes, hyacinths, turquoiſes, and the fineſt rubies in the world. The iſland was formerly divided into ſeveral kingdoms, but is now ſaid to be under one monarch. The inland parts are but little known. Candi is ſaid to be the capital: the Dutch have long been in poſſeſſion of ſeveral of the principal towns on the ſea coaſt.

CHAN-SI, a province of China, which is one of the ſmalleſt of the empire, is bounded on the eaſt by that of Pe-tche-li, on the ſouth by Ho-nan, on the weſt by Chen-ſi, and on the north by the great wall. The Chineſe ſay, that the firſt inhabitants of China fixed their reſidence in this province. Its climate is healthy and agreeable, and the ſoil is fruitful. It abounds in muſk, porphyry, marble, lapis-lazuli, and jaſper of various colours: iron-mines, ſalt-pits, and cryſtal, are alſo common here. This province is full of mountains; ſome of which are uninhabited, and have a wild and frightful appearance; but the reſt are cultivated with care, and cut into terraces from top to bottom, which preſent a very agreeable proſpect; on the tops of ſome there are found vaſt plains, which are no leſs fertile than the richeſt low lands. Vines grow here, which produce the beſt grapes in this part of Aſia; good wine may be made from them; but the Chineſe prefer drying them, and ſelling them in the other provinces. The mountains abound in coal, which the inhabitants pound, and having mixed with water, form into ſmall cakes; it is not very inflammable, but, when once kindled, affords a ſtrong and laſting fire. Chan-ſi comprehends in its diſtrict 5 cities of the firſt claſs, and 85 of the ſecond and third. The capital of the province is called Tai-yuen-ſou.

It is divided into 6 diſtricts, which contain 6 cities of the firſt claſs, and 114 of the ſecond and third. Beſides theſe, there are found along the coaſt 15 or 16 forts, ſeveral villages of conſiderable note on account of their commerce, and a number of ſmall iſlands, the greater part of which have harbours very convenient for the Chineſe junks, which eaſily paſs from thence to Corea or Leao-tong. Beſides the grand imperial canal, which traverſes this province, it contaims a great many lakes, ſtreams, and rivers, which contribute no leſs to the ornament than fecundity of its plains; however, it has much to fear from drought, as it ſeldom rains here. Locuſts, alſo, make ſemetimes great devaſtation. There is no country, perhaps, where game is more plentiful, or where pheaſants, partridges, and quails, are ſold cheaper. Beſides common ſilk-worms, there is found in this province a ſpecies of inſect much reſembling our caterpillars, which produce, indeed, a coarſer kind of ſilk, but of which much ſtronger ſtuffs are made; as theſe ſtuffs are very durable, they have an extenſive ſale throughout China. CHARLESTOWN, a town in the United States of America, in South Carolina, ſituated on a neck of land, at the conflux of the rivers Aſhley and Cooper, both of which are large and navigable; the Aſhley river for ſhips of tolerable burden 20 miles above the town, and for boats and canoes near 40. The navigation for ſhips in Cooper's river does not extend ſo far, but boats may advance farther. The union of theſe rivers below the town forms a convenient and ſpacious harbour, at a diſtance of about 7 miles from the ſea. The town is regularly built, and fortified before the American war, as well by art as nature. The ſituation is flat and low, and the water brackiſh; but the country round is agreeable and fruitful; the ſtreets are well laid out, extending eaſt and weſt from river to river, theſe are interſected by others, ſo that the town is formed into a number of ſquares. The houſes built at firſt were of wood, thoſe more lately erected of brick. The public buildings of Charleſtown are an exchange, town-houſe, and armory; two churches for Epiſcopalians, two for Independents, with other places of worſhip for French Proteſtants, Methodiſts, Roman Catholics, Preſbyterians, Quakers, and Jews. Charleſtown was incorporated in 1783, and divided into 13 wards, with as many wardens, one of whom is elected intendant of the city. By theſe wardens and intendant the city is governed, and the laws put in force. In the year 1787, the number of houſes was computed at 1600, which contained 9600 white inhabitants, and 5400 ſlaves. In the year 1791, the number of inhabitants was 16,359, of whom 7684 were ſlaves. CHELSEA, a large and populous village of England, in the county of Middleſex, ſituated on the north ſide of the Thames. Where ſtands that great hoſpital, erected for the aſylum of diſabled or decayed ſoldiers, and one of the beſt of the kind. The original building on the ſpot was a college, founded by Dr. Sutkliff, dean of Exeter, in the reign of king James I. for the ſtudy of polemic divinity; but the ſum ſettled upon the foundation by Dr. Sutkliff being far unequal to the end propoſed, the reſt was left to private contributions; and theſe coming in ſlowly, the work was ſtopped before it was finiſhed, and therefore fell to ruin. At length the ground on which the old college was erected, becoming eſcheated to the crown, Charles II. began to erect the preſent hoſpital, which was carried on by James II. and completed by William and Mary. The expence of erecting theſe buildings is computed to amount to 150,000l. and the extent of the ground is above 40 acres. In the wings are 16 wards, in which are accommodations for above 400 men, and there are beſides, in the other buildings, a conſiderable number of apartments for officers and ſervants. Theſe penſioners conſiſt of ſuperannuated veterans, who have been at leaſt 20 years in the army; or thoſe ſoldiers who are diſabled in the ſervice of the crown. They wear red coats lined with blue, and are provided with all other clothes, diet, waſhing, and lodging. The governor has 500l. a year; the lieutenant-governor 250l. and the major 150l. Thirty-ſix officers are allowed 6d. a day; 34 lighthorſemen, and 30 ſerjeants, have 2s. a week each; 48 corporals and drums have 10d. per week; and 336 private men, are each allowed 8d. a week; the out-penſioners, who amount to between 8 and 9000, have each 7l. 12. 6d. a year. Theſe great expences are ſupported by a poundage deducted out of the pay of the army, with one day's pay once a year from each officer and common ſoldier. Here likewiſe is a conſiderable place of public reſort, called Ranelagh, from the title of the nobleman to whom the eſtate belonged.

CHEN-SI, a province of China, bounded on the eaſt by Hoang-ho, which ſeparates it from Chan-ſi; on the ſouth by the provinces of Se-tchuen and Hou-quang, on the north by Tartary and the great wall, and on the weſt by the country of the Moguls. Chen-ſi is one of the moſt extenſive provinces of the empire; it had formerly three viceroys; but at preſent it has only two, beſides the governors of So-tcheou and Kan-tcheou, which are the ſtrongeſt places in the country. This province in general is very fertile, commercial and rich. It produces little rice, but the inhabitants have plentiful crops of wheat and millet; it is, however, ſubject to long droughts, and clouds of locuſts ſometimes deſtroy every thing that grows in the fields: the Chineſe eat thoſe inſects boiled. The country abounds with drugs, rhubarb, muſk, cinnabar, wax, honey, and coals, of which it contains inexhauſtible veins; it has alſo rich gold mines, which, for political reaſons, are not allowed to be opened: gold duſt is waſhed down in ſuch abundance among the ſand of the torrents and rivers, that a number of people have no other ſubſiſtence but what they gain by collecting it. Travellers remark that the natives of this country are more polite and affable to ſtrangers, and have greater genius than the Chineſe of the northern provinces. This province is divided into two parts, the Eaſtern and the Weſtern: it contains 8 fou, or cities of the firſt claſs, and 106 of the ſecond and third. Si-ngan-fou is the capital.

CHEN YANG, or Moug-den, a city of Chineſe Tartary, and capital of a department, or diſtrict, in the country of the Mantchew Tartars, ſituated on an eminence: the Mantchew Tartars have been at great pains to ornament it with ſeveral public edifices, and to provide it with magazines of arms and ſtore-houſes. They conſider it as the principal place of their nation; and ſince China has been under their dominion, they have eſtabliſhed the ſame tribunals here as at Peking, excepting that called Liipou: theſe tribunals are compoſed of Tartars only; their determination is final; and in all their acts they uſe the Tartar characters and language. It may be conſidered as a double city, one of which is encloſed within the other: the interior city contains the emperor's palace, hotels of the principal mandarines, ſovereign courts, and the different tribunals; the exterior is inhabited by the common people, tradeſmen, and all thoſe who by their employments or profeſſions are not obliged to lodge in the interior; the latter is almoſt a league in circumference, and the walls which encloſe both are more than three leagues round; theſe walls were entirely rebuilt in 1631, and repaired ſeveral times ſince: 54 miles ENE. Peking.

CHEN-YANG, a diſtrict or department of Chineſe Tartary, comprehending what was called Leao-tong, and extends as far as the great wall, which bounds it on the ſouth; it is encloſed on the eaſt, north, and weſt by a paliſade, which is more calculated to defend the country againſt the nocturnal invaſions of robbers than to ſtop the march of an army; it is conſtructed only of ſtakes, 7 feet high, without any bank of earth, ditch, or the ſmalleſt fortified work; the gates are no better, and are guarded only by a few ſoldiers.

CHENZINI, or Chinting, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Sandomirz: near it are mines of ſilver and lead, and quarries of marble: 16 miles E. Malagoez.

CHEPSTOW, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Monmouth, ſituated near the mouth of the Wye, over which is a bridge of ſtone and timber. It is a large, well built, populous, and flouriſhing town, formerly walled round, and defended by a caſtle, part of which remains. In the month of March, 1647, the caſtle was garriſoned by king Charles the Firſt, and continued in the hands of the Royaliſts till May, 1648, when the Welch, under major Langhorne, colonel Poyer, and colonel Powell, were defeated; Poyer was executed, and moſt of the caſtles of Wales were conquered about this time. Chepſtow is the port for all the towns that ſtand on the rivers Wye and Lug. Ships of 600 tons burden are built here, and the town of late is become ſo flouriſhing, that the merchants import their own wine from Oporto, and deals, hemp, flax, pitch, and tar, &c. from Norway and Ruſſia, as ſhips of 700 tons burden come up to the town. The tide comes in at this place with greater rapidity than at Briſtol, and ſometimes riſes at the bridge from 30 to 60 feet. In January, 1761, the bridge was much damaged by an extraordinary riſe of the tide, which then flowed above 70 feet. As half the bridge is in Monmouthſhire, and the other half in Glouceſterſhire, it is maintained at the expence of both counties; and in 1790 and 1791, it underwent a thorough repair. This port ſends great quantities of timber to Portſmouth, Plymouth, Deptford, and Woolwich, and bark, iron, cyder, &c. to ſeveral parts of Ireland, Liverpool, and other places. There are five conſtant trading veſſels between this port and London, which in general go and return in two months. There is a market-boat, of 70 tons burden, that goes regularly from this place to Briſtol every Tueſday, and returns every Thurſday. It has a market weekly on Saturday, well ſupplied with all ſorts of proviſions, and on the laſt Monday in every month for cattle and ſwine : 28 miles SW. Glouceſter, and 134 WNW. London. Long. 2. 36. W. Grnenwich. Lat. 51. 42. N.

CHEQUATAN, or Segutanaio, a town of North America, in the country of Mexico, and province of Mechoacan.

CHER, a river of France, which riſes near Auzance, in the department of the Creuſe, paſſes by Montluçon, Ainay-le-Vieux, St. Amand, Chateauneuf, St. Florent, Vierzon, Menetou, Villefranche, Chabris, Selles, St. Aignan, Montrichard, Blere, &c. and joins the Loire, a few miles below Tours.

CHER, a department of France, bounded on the north by the department of the Loiret, on the eaſt by that of the Nyèvre, from which it is ſeparated by the Allier, on the ſouth by the department of the Allier, and on the weſt by the department of the Indre and Loire, and Cher : it takes its name from the river Cher, which croſſes a part of it. Bourges is the capital.

CHERASCO, a town of Italy, in the principality of Piedmont, and capital of a comté of the ſame name, on the borders of the comté of Aſti, ſituated on a mountain, at the conflux of the Stura with the Tanaro. It is ſaid to have been built by ſome inhabitants of Alba, Manzano, Miana, &c. who were driven away from their towns by the tyranny of their reſpective lords : they fixed on this ſpot, built a town, and ſurrounded it with walls ; Chriſtina of France, ducheſs of Savoy, cauſed the town to be fortified in the modern manner, with baſtions, foſſes, and outworks. Since that time Cheraſco has been conſidered as the key and boulevard of the eſtates of Savoy, being ſituated on the frontiers of Piedmont, Montferrat, and the duchy of Milan ; and ſtrong both by art and nature. Cheraſco was firſt a republic, governed by its particular laws, though profeſſing to be dependant on the emperors of Germany, and to obey them. This flouriſhing ſtate continued to the year 1260, when they took the oath of allegiance to Charles I. of Anjou, comte of Provence, afterwards king of Naples and Sicily, and continued ſubject to that crown till the reign of Jane I. Queen of Naples, who took no care to protect her ſubjects from their enemies, when the inhabitants followed the example of other towns, and ſurrendered themſelves voluntarily to Amadeus VI. comte of Savoy, and Jaques de Savoy, prince of Achaia. This ſituation they did not long enjoy, for in a few years after they became ſucceſſively ſubject to the marquis of Montferrat ; Luchin Viſconti, prince of Milan ; a ſecond time to Jane, queen of Naples ; Galeas, and John Galeas de Viſconti : Valentina, the daughter of this laſt prince, married Louis, duke of Orleans, and brought with her as a portion the town of Cheraſco, and the country round : from the ſucceſſors of this prince, it came to Charles V. who gave it, in the year 1530, to Charles III. duke of Savoy, ſirnamed the Good, in conſideration of his marriage with Beatrice, of Portugal. It was taken more than once in the ſame century by the Auſtrians and the French, but reſtored to Emanuel Philbert, ſon of Charles, by the peace of Cambray, in 1559. Victor Amadeus gave it the title of City, making it the capital of a province, and reſidence of a governor. The civil government is conducted by 3 ſyndics, 28 counſellors, and 8 maſters of accompts. It is in the dioceſe of Aſti, and has 7 pariſh churches, 4 within the walls, and 3 without. The comté is about 9 miles in diameter, the land is fertile, the plains producing great plenty of corn, and the hills, which are ſome higher, ſome lower, produce wine, both good and in quantities for exportation : 20 miles SSE. Turin, 15 miles E. Saluzzo. Long. 25. 27. E. Ferro. Lat. 44. 33. N.

CHERAW HILL, a mountain of United America, in the ſtate of South Carolina : 43 miles NNE. Queenborough.

CHERBURG, a ſea-port town of France, in the department of the Channel, ſituated at the bottom of a large bay, between Cape Barfleur and Cape la Hogue, containing about 6000 inhabitants. Before the revolution, it was the ſeat of a governor and an admiralty. Building of ſmall veſſels, and a manufacture of woollen ſtuffs, form the principal employment of the inhabitants. In the year 1758, the town was taken and plundered by the Engliſh, the port deſtroyed, and the ſhips burned in the harbour. This port has always been conſidered by the French as an object of great importance in the navigation of the Engliſh Channel, and immenſe ſums have been expended in the erection of piers, deepening and enlarging the harbour, and erecting fortifications. Veſſels of 900 tons can be admitted in high water, and 250 in low : 10 poſts N. Coutances, and 41 WNW. Paris. Long. 16. 2. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 39. N.

It belongs to the Venetians, who ſend a nobleman as governor every two years, with the title of count, or captain, who reſides at the capital, ſituated in the centre of the iſland, which has the ſame name, and contains about 2500 inhabitants. Long. 32. 12. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 10. N.

CHERSON, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Ekaterinoſlav, ſituated on the Dnieper, built and made a free port in the year 1774, chiefly conſtructed of hewn ſtone. It is intended to be the principal mart for all commodities of export and import : but if an extenſive trade ſhould take place in this quarter, the great depoſitary for the merchandize will be more conveniently fixed on ſome ſpot below the bar of the Dnieper, and about 12 miles ſouth of Cherſon. It contains a dock for the conſtruction of large veſſels ; from which ſeveral men of war and frigates, as well as merchant ſhips, have already been launched. The humane Mr. Howard died in this town, on the 20th day of January, 1790 : 128 miles SW. Ekaterinoſlav, and 812. S. Peterſburg. Long. 50. 40. E. Ferro. Lat. 46. 40. N.

CHESHIRE, a county palatine of England, bounded on the north by the Iriſh Sea, and by the counties of Lancaſter and York, on the eaſt by the counties of Derby and Stafford, on the ſouth by the county of Salop, and on the weſt by the counties of Flint and Denbigh ; about 50 miles long, and 25 broad, divided into ſeven hundreds, which contain 101 pariſhes, 1 city, and 11 market towns. The proportion of the cultivated parts of the county, and thoſe which lie either waſte, or in a ſtate of little profit, are according to a general view drawn up by Mr. Wedge, perhaps nearly as follows ; arable, meadow, paſture, &c. about 615,000 acres ; waſte lands, heaths, commons, greens, but few woods of any extent, 30,000 acres ; peat bogs and moſſes 20,000 acres ; common fields, probably, not ſo much as 1000 acres ; ſea ſands within the eſtuary of the Dee, excluſive of what may be upon the ſhores of the river Merſey, 10,000 acres ; in the whole, 676,000 acres. The general appearance of Cheſhire is that of an extended plain ; but on the eaſtern ſide there is a range of hilly, or rather mountainous country, connected with the Derbyſhire and Yorkſhire hills, of about 25 miles in length, and 5 in width, extending from near Congleton, to the north-eaſtern extremity of the county. From Macclesfield, in a north-weſtern direction, the ſurface is irregular and hilly ; but continues of that deſcription not farther than to Alderly, about five or ſix miles from Macclesfield. On the Shropſhire ſide the ſurface is alſo broken and irregular. Approaching the weſtern ſide of the country (at the diſtance of about ten miles eaſt from Cheſter) there is another range of irregular hills, which ſeparates the waters of the Dee and Merſey ; theſe hills are in a direction almoſt north and ſouth, and extend about 25 miles from Malpas, on the ſouth ſide the county, to Frodſham, on the north ſide of it. The remaining part of the county, amounting nearly to four fifths of the whole, is probably not more, on the medium, than from 100 to 200 feet above the level of the ſea. Cheſhire has formerly been celebrated as the vale royal of England ; and if ſeen from the high lands about Macclesfield, the whole of the county to the weſtward has undoubtedly the appearance of one extended plain. Cheſter is the city ; the market towns are Nantwich, Macclesfield, cleſfield, Maplas, Middlewich, Northwich, Congleton, Altringham, Frodſham, Knotsford, Stockport, and Sanbach. The principal rivers are the Merſey and the Dee; theſe receive and carry off to the ſea, all the ſmaller rivers and rivulets in Cheſhire, viz. the Weaver, the Dane, the Wheelock, the Goyte, the Bolling, &c. &c. Cheſhire has been long noted for cheeſe of the beſt quality; other productions are corn, excellent ſalt, coal, iron-ore, millſtones, timber, alum, hops, &c. The yearly export of cheeſe from this county to London only has been computed at 14,000 tons; to Briſtol and York, down the Severn and the Trent, 8000 more, beſides what is ſent to Scotland and Ireland.

CHESTER, a city of England, and capital of Cheſhire, ſituated on the river Dee, about 20 miles from the Iriſh Sea, a conſiderable time the ſtation of the twentieth Roman legion, the command of which was given to Julius Agricola, by the emperor Veſpaſian, and of courſe muſt have been built before his time, but probably not many years, though fanciful writers have dated its antiquity to a remote period indeed. The city is ſquare, and ſurrounded by a wall, nearly two miles in circumference; it contains 9 pariſh churches, a Roman Catholic chapel, and 6 places of worſhip for Diſſenters of different perſuaſions. It is ſaid to have been erected into a corporation in the year 1242, and is now governed by a mayor, recorder, aldermen, ſheriffs, common council-men, &c. The ſtreets are hollowed out of a rock to the depth of one ſtory beneath the level of the ground on each ſide; and the houſes have a ſort of covered portico running on from houſe to houſe, and ſtreet to ſtreet, level with the ground behind, but one ſtory above the ſtreet in front. They are called rows, and afford a ſheltered walk for foot paſſengers. Beneath them are ſhops and warehouſes, level with the ſtreet: and apartments above them. The walls are kept in repair by an officer, called a Murenger, and a rate called murage, on all imports by perſons not free of the city. The cuſtody of the gates of Cheſter was committed to very conſiderable noblemen: Eaſt gate to the earl of Oxford; Bridge-gate to the earl of Shrewſbury; Water gate, to the earl of Derby, and North-gate to the mayor. The principal manufacture is gloves: and its fairs are reſorted to three times a year by a great concourſe of the Iriſh linen merchants. The caſtle is a noble ſtructure, having a tower aſcribed to Julius Cæſar, and bearing his name, which, as well as its workmanſhip, prove it to have been originally built by the Romans, though the preſent walls are evidently Norman. Cheſter is the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of the archbiſhop of York, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. The number of inhabitants, including the ſuburbs, is eſtimated at 15,000. Here Henry II. and Malcolm IV. of Scotland, had an interview in 1259, and the latter ceded the three counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, and Weſtmoreland, formerly wreſted from the Engliſh crown. Richard II. in his 12th year, converted Cheſter into a principality, annexing it to the caſtle of Holt, the lordſhip of Bromfield and Yale, Chirkland, and ſeveral other places in Wales and on the borders, enacting that it ſhould be given only to the king's eldeſt ſon. But Henry IV. reſcinded an act that encroached ſo much on the dignity of his ſon as prince of Wales. The king's eldeſt is, however, created earl of Cheſter. The ſweating ſickneſs deſtroyed here, in 1506, 91 houſeholders in three days, and only four women; and was followed in 1517 by a dreadful peſtilence. A more grievous one viſited it in 1647, after it was taken by the parliament forces, under Sir William Brereton, having held out a twenty weeks ſiege, and ſurrendered February 3d, 1645-6, on terms that did honour to the ſpirit of the beſieged: 145½ miles N. Briſtol, and 181½ NW. London. Long. 3. W. London. Lat. 53. 12. N.

CHIAVENNA, (County of), a county of Swiſſerland, in alliance with the Griſons, ſituated at the foot of the Rhetian Alps, to the north of the lake of Como, about eight leagues long, and ſix wide. The country is for the moſt part fertile in wine and paſtures. The inhabitants raiſe a good deal of ſilk: but not corn ſufficient for their wants; this they obtain of their neighbours for cattle, wine, and ſilk. The inhabitants are Catholics, and depend on the biſhop of Como for ſpiritual matters. It came under the Griſons at the ſame time with the Valteline, and is governed by a commiſſary.

CHIAVENNA, a town of Swiſſerland, and capital of the county of the ſame name. It is ſituated at the foot and upon the ſide of a mountain, and contains about 3,000 ſouls. The inhabitants carry on but little commerce. The principal articles of exportation are ſtone-pots, called lavezzi, and raw ſilk. The whole country produces about 3,600 pounds of the laſt commodity. A manufacture of ſilk ſtockings, the only one in the town, has been lately eſtabliſhed. The neighbouring country is covered with vineyards; but the wine is of a meagre ſort, and only a ſmall quantity is exported. The great ſupport of Chiavenna is the tranſport of merchandiſe, this town being the principal communication between the Milaneſe and Germany. From hence the goods are ſent either by Coire into Germany, or through Pregalia and the Engadinas into the Tyrol. There is a duty laid by the Griſons upon all the merchandiſe which paſſes through Chiavenna; but this duty is ſo ſmall that the whole cuſtoms, including thoſe in the Valteline, are farmed for 17,000 florins, or about 1260l. per annum. The principal object of curioſity in the environs of Chiavenna is the fortreſs in ruins, ſeated upon the ſummit of a rock, which overlooks the town, and celebrated in the hiſtory of the Griſons for its almoſt impregnable ſtrength: 38 miles N. CHICHESTER, a city of England, in the county of Suſſex, ſituated on the river Lavant, which a little below joins an arm of the ſea, ſaid to have been built by Ciſſa, the ſecond Saxon prince of this country, and the reſidence of his ſucceſſors; but the Roman pavement and other circumſtances, ſhow it to have been more ancient, and at leaſt known to the Romans. It was walled round, and furniſhed with four gates, which are now pulled down. Four principal ſtreets extend from the centre, with the names of Eaſt, Weſt, North, and South, from their direction. The river almoſt ſurrounds the town, but the water is too ſhallow to admit ſhips of burden up to it, which are obliged to unload near two miles below. An act of parliament was obtained in the reign of James I. to make the Lavant navigable up to the city, but not put into execution. The branch, or arm of the ſea, near which the city is ſituated, is ſpacious, well ſheltered, and capable of receiving ſhips of great burthen. Many of its banks are ſteep; where wharfs or warehouſes might be erected at a ſmall expence. The entrance lies near a place called Cock Buſh, near Weſt Wittering (where it is ſuppoſed that Ella firſt landed) and a ſmall iſland on the oppoſite ſide, called Hayling. The channel is not difficult; but there are ſand-banks off the mouth of the harbour, which render it impoſſible for ſhips of heavy burden to come in, unleſs at ſpring tides. Merchant veſſels are frequently built and repaired here, and ſometimes ſhips of war. Chicheſter is the ſee of a biſhop, and has five pariſh churches, beſides the cathedral. It is a corporation, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. A manufacture of baize, blankets, and coarſe cloths has lately been eſtabliſhed. The manufacture of needles, which has been long carried on here, is now almoſt annihilated. Two markets are held weekly, on Wedneſday and Saturday, for corn and proviſions; and on every other Wedneſday a market for live ſheep and cattle: 36 miles SE. Wincheſter, and 61 SSE. London. Long. 0. 49. W. Greenwich. Lat. 50. 47. N.

CHILHOWEE, a town of United America, in the Tennaſee government: 25 miles S. Knoxville.

CHILI, an extenſive country of South America, extending from Peru on the north, to the country of Magellan on the ſouth; bounded on the eaſt by immenſe deſerts, which divide it from Paraguay and other parts of South America, and on the weſt by the Pacific Ocean. The incas of Peru had prevailed upon great part of the inhabitants of that vaſt region to ſubmit to their wiſe laws, and intended to ſubdue the whole, had they not met with inſuperable difficulties. This important project was reſumed by the Spaniards as ſoon as they had conquered the principal provinces of Peru. In the beginning of 1535, Almagro ſet out from Cuſco, and paſſed the Cordeleras; and, though he had loſt a great part of the ſoldiers who attended him in his expedition, he was received with the greateſt marks of ſubmiſſion by the nations that had been formerly under the dominion of the empire, where he ended his days in an unfortunate manner. The Spaniards appeared again in Chili in 1541. Baldivia, their leader, entered it without the leaſt oppoſition. The inhabitants were gathering in their crops; but as ſoon as the harveſt was over, they took up arms, and never laid them down for ten years. Some diſtricts, indeed, diſcouraged by the continual loſſes they ſuſtained, at length ſubmitted; but the reſt reſolutely fought for their liberty, though they were generally defeated. Their moſt irreconcileable enemies are the inhabitants of Arauco and Tucapel, thoſe to the ſouth of the river Bobio, or who extend towards the Cordeleras. Their manners, which bear a greater reſemblance to thoſe of the ſavages of North America, than to thoſe of the Peruvians their neighbours, render them conſequently more formidable. When they go to war, they carry nothing with them, and want neither tents nor baggage. The ſame trees from which they gather their food, ſupply them with lances and darts. As they are ſure of finding in one place what they had in another, they willingly reſign any country which they are unable to defend. All places are equally indifferent to them. Their troops being free from all incumbrance of proviſions and ammunition, march with ſurpriſing agility. They expoſe their lives like men who ſet little value on them; and if they loſe the field of battle, they are not at a loſs for magazines and encampments wherever there is ground covered with fruits. They ſometimes invite their neighbours to join them to attack the common enemy, and this they call throwing the arrow, becauſe this call flies as ſwiftly and ſilently as an arrow from one habitation to another. A certain night is immediately fixed upon, in the dead of which, the time they always chooſe for the commencement of hoſtilities, they fall upon the next village where there are Spaniards, and from thence proceed to others. They murder all the inhabitants except the white women, whom they always carry off. Before the enemy has time to collect his forces, they all unite in one body. Their army, though more formidable from their numbers than from their diſcipline, is not afraid of attacking the poſts that are moſt ſtrongly fortified. This fury often ſucceeds, becauſe they are ſo conſtantly ſupplied with reinforcements that they are not ſenſible of their loſſes. If theſe are ſo conſiderable as to oblige them to deſiſt, they retire to the diſtance of a few leagues, and five or ſix days after, fall upon ſome other place. Theſe barbarians never think they are beaten unleſs they are ſurrounded. If they can take poſſeſſion of a place difficult of acceſs, they think they are conquerors. The head of one Spaniard, which they carry off in triumph, comforts them for the death of a hundred Indians. The country is of ſuch conſiderable extent, that when they find themſelves in danger from the enemy, they forſake their poſſeſſions, and remove into ſome impenetrable foreſt. Recruited by other Indians, they ſoon return into the parts they had before inhabited; and this alternate ſucceſſion of flight and reſiſtance, of boldneſs and fear, is the circumſtance that renders them unconquerable. War is to them a kind of amuſement. As it is neither expenſive nor inconvenient to them, they have nothing to apprehend from its continuance; and it is a conſtant rule with them never to ſue for peace. The pride of Spain muſt always condeſcend to make the firſt overtures. When theſe are favourably received, a conference is held. The governor of Chili and the Indian general, attended by the moſt diſtinguiſhed captains on both ſides, ſettle the terms of accommodation, at a convivial meeting. The Spaniards are always obliged to purchaſe peace by ſome preſents, and, after a variety of fruitleſs attempts, they have been forced to give up all thoughts of extending their conqueſt, and reduced to cover their frontiers by erecting forts at proper diſtances. Theſe precautions are taken to prevent the Indians, who have ſubmitted, from joining the independent ſavages, and likewiſe to repel the inroads of the latter into the colonies. Theſe colonies are diſperſed on the borders of the South Sea; they are parted from Peru by a deſert that meaſures 80 leagues, and bounded by the iſland of Chiloe, at the extremity next the Straits of Magellan. On that great length of coaſt there are no ſettlements except thoſe of Valdivia, Conception, Valparaiſo, and Coquimbo, or La Serena, which are all ſeaports. In the inland country is St. Jago, the capital of the colony. There is no culture nor habitation at any diſtance from theſe towns. The buildings are all very low, made of unburnt brick, and moſtly thatched. This practice is obſerved on account of the frequent earthquakes, and is properly adapted to the nature of the climate, as well as the indolence of the inhabitants. They are robuſt and well ſhaped men, but few in number. In all that large ſettlement there are not 20,000 white men, and not more than 60,000 negroes, or Indians, able to bear arms. The military eſtabliſhment amounted formerly to 2000 men; but the maintaining of them was found too expenſive, and they were reduced to 500 at the beginning of the century. If Chili is uninhabited, it is not owing to the climate, which is one of the moſt wholeſome in the world. The vicinity of the Cordeleras gives it ſuch a delightful temperature, as could not otherwiſe be expected in that latitude. There is not a more pleaſant province in all the mother country. The richneſs of its gold mines has been too much extolled. Their united produce never exceeds 220,000l. ſterling a year. The gold was formerly brought over in bullion; but ever ſince the year 1749, it is coined in the mint ſet up at St. Jago. The excellent copper mines of Coquimbo ſupply the whole kingdom of Peru. A more certain ſource of wealth, though leſs pleaſing to the poſſeſſors, is the prodigious fertility of the ſoil. All the European fruits have improved in that happy climate. The wine would be excellent, if nature were aſſiſted by art. The corn harveſt is reckoned a bad one when it does not yield a hundred fold. With all theſe advantages, Chili has no direct intercourſe with the mother country. Their whole trade is confined to Peru, Paraguay, and the Indians, on their own frontiers. The inhabitants of Chili ſell their moſt ordinary and leſs valuable commodities to theſe ſavages for oxen, horſes, and their own children, whom they are ready to part with for the moſt trifling things. Wine and ſpirituous liquors were ſold till the year 1724, to theſe people, who, like moſt other ſavages, are exceſſively fond of them. When they were intoxicated, they uſed to take up arms, maſſacre al the Spaniards they met with, and ſuddenly attack the forts and ravage the country near their dwellings. Theſe outrages were ſo often repeated, that it was found neceſſary ſtrictly to forbid this dangerous trade. The goo effects of the prohibition are daily felt. The commotions of theſe peopl are leſs frequent and leſs dangerous, and their peaceable behaviour ha brought on a viſible increaſe of intercourſe with them. Chili ſupplie Peru with great plenty of hides, dried fruit, copper, ſalt meat, horſe hemp, lard, wheat, and gold. In exchange for theſe articles, Peru ſend tobacco, ſugar, cocoa, earthen ware, woollen cloth, linen, hats made a Quito, and every article of luxury that is brought from Europe. Th ſhips ſent from Callao on this traffic were formerly bound for Concepti Bay, but now come to Valparaiſo. Chili ſends to Paraguay ſome wooll ſtuffs called ponchos, which are uſed for cloaks. It alſo ſends wine brandy, oil, and chiefly gold; and receives in return wax, a kind of ta low fit to make ſoap, the herb of Paraguay, European goods, and many negroes as Buenos Ayres can furniſh. Chili is a ſtate entirely diſtinct from Peru, and is governed by a chief, who is abſolute in all political, civil, and military affairs, and independent of the viceroy, who has no authority except when a governor dies to appoint one in his room for a time, till the mother country names a ſucceſſor.

CHILKA, a lake of Hindooſtan, on the ſea coaſt of the province of Cattack, on the north-weſt ſide of the Bay of Bengal. This lake ſeems the effect of a breach of the ſea over a flat ſandy ſhore, and extending about 36 miles in length, and from 10 to 13 in breadth, with many inhabited iſlands in it, on the north-weſt it is bounded by a ridge of mountains, 40 miles SW. Cattack.

CHILLAN, or Chilan, a town of South America, in the country of Chili, and capital of a diſtrict, it is chiefly inhabited by Indians: 75 miles NE. Conception.

CHILLEIROS, a town of Portugal, in the province of Eſtramadura: 4½ leagues NW. Liſbon.

CHILLEURS, a town of France, in the department of the Loiret, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Neuville-aux-Bois: 14 miles NE. Orleans.

CHILLON, a town of Swiſſerland, in the canton of Bern: 5 miles ESE. Vevai.

CHILLY, a town of France, in the department of the Jura, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Lons le Saunier: 1 league SW. Lons le Saunier.

CHILMARY, a town of Hindooſtan, in the country of Bengal: 110 miles NE. Moorſhedabad.

CHILOE, a conſiderable iſland in the South Pacific Ocean, on the coaſt of Chili. The ſouth part of it is divided from the continent by a narrow ſea, which forms a bay. This coaſt is ſubject to tempeſtuous weather, eſpecially in March, when winter begins. The Spaniards have but one little fort in this iſland called Chacao, and the town of Caſtro. This iſland produces all neceſſary refreſhments and proviſions, except wine; and much ambergriſe is found here. About this iſland are many more, all which together form a juriſdiction called the Juriſdiction of Chiloe. The iſlands of Chiloe are reputed barren; but their ſoil is not really ſo. The nature of the climate is ſuch, that it rains almoſt all the year: ſo that only maiz, or other ſuch grains, can ripen, that want not much ſun. The diet of the natives is moſtly of a root called Papayas, which grows bigger in this iſland than in any other place. The cedar trees grow to an amazing ſize. Lat. 43. S.

CHILOK, a river of Siberia, which runs into the Selenga, near Selenginſk.

CHILQUES, a town of South America, and capital of a juriſdiction of the ſame name in Peru: 45 miles S. Cuſco.

CHILTERN, a ridge of hills, which croſſes the county of Bucks, a little to the ſouth of the centre, reaching from Tring, in Hertfordſhire, to Henly, in the county of Oxford. To theſe hills called the Chiltern, is annexed the nominal office of ſteward under the crown, the acceptance of which, of conſequence, enables a member of the Britiſh parliament to vacate his ſeat.

CHIMAY, a town of the Netherlands, in the county of Hainault, often ruined by wars, and as often rebuilt. It was ceded to France by the treaty of Ratiſbon, in 1684, and reſtored to the Spaniards by the peace of Ryſwick; near it are mines of iron, with founderies and forges; 10½ poſts ENE. Cambray, and 15½ SE. Lille.

CHIMBE, a town of South America, and capital of a juriſdiction, in the province of Quito. The town contains about 80 families, Spaniards and Indians, and the whole diſtrict about 800 inhabitants.

CHIMBORAZO, a mountain of South America, in Peru, which reaches 3220 toiſes above the level of the ſea.

CHIMEPANIPESTICK, a river of Canada, which runs into the river St. Lawrence. Long. 61. 25. W. Greenwich, Lat. 50. 5. N.

CHIMERA, a town and fortreſs of European Turkey, capital of a diſtrict, in the province of Albania, ſituated on a rock near the ſea coaſt, oppoſite the iſland of Corfu: 18 miles S. Valona. Long. 36. 48. E. Ferro. Lat. 40. N.

CHIMLEIGH, ſee Chumleigh.

CHIMNEY, a town of the iſland of Ceylon: 94 miles SE. Candy.

CHINA, a country of Aſia, called by the Chineſe Tchong Koue, or The Middle Kingdom. The Weſtern Moguls called it Catay; the Mantchew Tartars Nican-courou; the Japaneſe Thau; and the people of Cochin-china and Siam Cin. It is probably from this laſt appellation that the word China is derived. The Chineſe hiſtory relates, that the firſt imperial family who carried their arms towards the weſt, aſſumed the name of Tſin, or Tai tſin. The armament, which the emperor Tſin-chi-hoang ſent as far as Bengal, muſt have made the people of India acquainted with the name of Tſin, whoſe formidable power had been felt at ſo great a diſtance. This name paſſing afterwards from India to Perſia and Egypt, might perhaps reach Europe. This is the moſt probable account we can give of the origin of the name by which this vaſt empire is generally known. China, properly ſo called, comprehends from north to ſouth 18 degrees; its extent from eaſt to weſt is ſomewhat leſs. The adjacent countries ſubjected to the Chineſe government, ſuch as the iſlands of Hainan and Formoſa, Leatong and Tartary, are not included in this eſtimation; for if we reckon from the moſt ſouthern point of the iſland of Hainan to the northern extremity of Tartary, which is under the dominion of the emperor of China, we ſhall find that the territories of this prince are more than 900 leagues in extent from north to ſouth, and about 1500 from eaſt to weſt, reckoning from the Eaſtern Sea as far as the country of Caſghar, conquered by the Chineſe in 1759. China is bounded on the north by Tartary, from which it is ſeparated by a wall 500 leagues in length; on the eaſt by the ſea; on the weſt by lofty mountains and deſerts; and towards the ſouth by the ocean, the kingdoms of Tong-king, Laos, and Cochin-china. It is divided into 15 provinces; which are Pe-tche-li, Kiang-nan, Kiang-ſi, Fokien, Tche-kiang, Hou-quang, Ho-nan, Chan-tong, Chan-ſi, Chen-ſi, Se-tchuen, Quang-tong, Quang-ſi, Yun-nan, and Koei-tchou. China is ſo extenſive, that all its provinces cannot enjoy the ſame temperature; their climate, and the nature of their ſoil, are therefore various, according as they are nearer or more remote from the ſouth; ſevere cold is felt at Peking, while the ſouthern provinces are expoſed to exceſſive heat: the air, however, is in general wholeſome, and the people commonly live to a great age. The principal mountains of China are thoſe in the northern and weſtern parts of the empire. The latter are rendered fruitful by the labour and induſtry of the Chineſe huſbandman; but the former, which are barren and rocky, being incapable of improvement, remain without cultivation. Thoſe of the provinces of Chen-ſi, Ho-nan, Quang-tong, and Fo-kien, ſhow few ſigns of culture; but they are covered with foreſts that abound with tall ſtraight trees of every ſpecies, which are fit for building, and particularly adapted for maſts and ſhip-timber. The emperor uſes them for his private edifices; and he ſometimes procures from theſe mountains enormous trunks, which he cauſes to be tranſported to the diſtance of 300 leagues, both by land and water carriage, to be employed in his palace, or for public works. Other mountains are no leſs uſeful, on account of the quickſilver, iron, copper, gold, and ſilver mines which they contain. Wiſdom and political foreſight have long prevented the latter from being opened. The prudent chiefs of the early dynaſties, well aware that artificial and ideal riches could not form a ſolid baſe for the happineſs of ſtates, were afraid of opening theſe ſources of luxury, leſt the people ſhould be induced to neglect the natural riches of their ſoil by applying to other labours than thoſe of agriculture. About the commencement of the 15th century, the emperor Tching-tſou cauſed a mine of precious ſtones to be ſhut, which had been opened by a private individual. Uſeleſs labours, ſaid this prince, produce ſterility; a mine of precious ſtones does not furniſh corn. At preſent the Chineſe are not ſo ſcrupulous; and it is certain they carry on a great trade in gold. The principal lakes of China are the Tong-ting-hou, ſituated in the province of Hou-quang, which is more than 80 leagues in circumference; the Tai-hou, part of which extends into Kiang-nan; the Hong-tſe, and the Kao-yeou, of the province of Kiang-nan; and the Poyang-hou, formed in Kiang-ſi by the confluence of four conſiderable rivers, which, like the ſea, is ſubject to tempeſt and ſtorms. This lake is near 100 leagues in length. Among an infinitude of great and ſmall rivers that water this vaſt kingdom, there are two particularly celebrated. The firſt is the Yang-tſe-kiang, or Son of the Sea. It has its ſource in the province of Yun-nan, traverſes thoſe of Hou-quang and Kiang-nan, and after having watered four provinces, through an extent of 400 leagues, it empties itſelf into the Eaſtern Sea, oppoſite the iſle of Tſong-ming, which is formed by the ſand accumulated at its mouth. The Chineſe ſay proverbially, the ſea has no ſhore, and the Kiang is without a bottom. The other great river of China is the Hoang-ho, or Yellow River. The Chineſe give it this name, becauſe the clay and ſand which it waſhes down, eſpecially in time of rain, make its water appear of a yellow colour. China is ſaid to contain at preſent 200,000,000 of inhabitants, out of which are 28,516,488 who, as maſters of families, pay taxes. The mandarins are not included in the number of thoſe taxable. The principal mandarins are the governors-general of provinces, 11 of whom have the title of tſong-tou, and 15 that of hiun-fou. Next to them are the treaſurers-general, in number 19; after theſe come the 18 lieutenants-general of the tribunal of crimes; the 17 inſpecting judges, appointed for whatever concerns the literati; and 113 travelling commiſſaries, whoſe buſineſs is to watch over the conduct of the governors of cities. All theſe grand mandarins have others under them, diſtinguiſhed by different titles, who act as their counſellors, and aſſiſt them in the adminiſtration of the affairs of their reſpective diſtricts. The treaſurers-general have under them 23 mandarins. The lieutenants-general of the tribunal of crimes have 40 aſſiſtants for general affairs, 18 who viſit priſons, and 27 to make informations according to law. The travelling commiſſaries have under their command 11 mandarins, who are obliged to lay before them the ſtate of the different public magazines which they viſit. The whole number of mandarins, appointed by the emperor for the adminiſtration of the affairs of all the provinces, amounts to 8965 ; but there is ſtill a greater number of inferior rank, who are appointed by the great mandarins. The literati form the moſt diſtinguiſhed part of the Chineſe nation. Since the dynaſty of Han, that is to ſay, for 2000 years back, they have conſtantly held the chief rank in the empire, and it is always from among them that maſters are choſen for the education of youth ; miniſters for the adminiſtration of public affairs ; and magiſtrates for judging the people ; in a word, the literati are, in ſome meaſure, the ſoul of the Chineſe nation, ſince it is from them alone that it receives its moral exiſtence, and its civil and political being. Since learning in China is the only means that conducts to honours, it is neceſſary that thoſe who aſpire to them ſhould cultivate letters ; and they muſt make it appear that they have cultivated them with ſucceſs before they can obtain any civil employment. To guard againſt impoſition in this reſpect, government has fixed, for every city of the firſt, ſecond, and third claſs, the number of literati who can be legally promoted every year to the firſt degree of literature, which is that of ſieou-tſai, and which anſwers to bachelor of arts in our univerſities. Every ſieou-tſai is accounted noble, and is never enrolled among the taxables. There are, then, in China, 24,700 individuals, who are every year introduced to the firſt degree of literati; and we may ſafely ſuppoſe the number of thoſe admitted before to be at leaſt twenty times as great. According to this eſtimation, there are always in China 494,020 literati who have taken degrees, and who, conſequently, are not included among the taxables. Next to the literati are the military, who alſo enjoy immunity, and are not comprehended among the taxables. All travellers agree in their accounts of the fertility of China, and of the extent and beauty of its plains. Neither incloſures, hedges, nor ditches, are ſeen in them ; ſcarcely even is there found a ſingle tree : ſo careful is the Chineſe huſbandman not to loſe the ſmalleſt portion of his land. The plains of the northern provinces produce wheat ; thoſe of the ſouth rice, becauſe the country is low and covered with water. The land in ſeveral provinces yields two crops in a year ; and even in the interval between the harveſts, the people ſow ſeveral kinds of pulſe, and other ſmall grain. What prevent famines in Europe is freedom of commerce, and the facility with which one country may be ſupplied from another : China is deſtitute of this advantage.—Placed by itſelf in the extremity of Aſia, and ſurrounded by barbarous nations, it muſt nouriſh itſelf, and procure from its own ſoil whatever is neceſſary for the ſubſiſtence of that immenſe number of inhabitants which is contained in its provinces. This, therefore, at all times has been the grand object of the care of the public miniſters. China has always had granaries and magazines erected in every province, and in moſt of the principal cities, for the relief of the people in times of ſcarcity. One great cauſe of the ſcarcity of grain in China is the prodigious conſumption which is occaſioned daily by the compoſition of wines, and of a ſpirituous liquor called rack. The mountains of China are ſo numerous, and ſituated under ſo various climates, that they muſt contain minerals of every ſpecies. There are, indeed, found there in great abundance mines of gold, ſilver, iron, copper, tin, lead, mercury, marble, cryſtal, cinnabar, lapis-lazuli, &c. Gold and ſilver would be much more common in this empire, did the Chineſe policy permit the mines which contain theſe metals to be opened ; but the emperors have always feared, that if the people ſhould be expoſed to the temptation of theſe artificial riches, they would be induced to forſake the more uſeful labours of agriculture. Iron, lead, and tin mines, muſt be very common, ſince theſe metals are ſold at a low rate throughout the whole empire. The copper mines of the provinces of Yunnan and Koei-tcheou have furniſhed, for a great number of years, all the ſmall coin that is ſtruck in the empire. Beſides common copper, the Chineſe have another kind, which they call petong, or white copper ; it is ſo pure and fine, that it approaches near to ſilver. Quarries and coal mines are ſo abundant in every province of the empire, that there is perhaps no country in the world where they are ſo common. Quarries of marble are very common in China, eſpecially in the province of Fo-kien. As China abounds with potters' earth of various kinds and of all colours, ſome mixed with gravel, others with the fineſt ſand, and ſome ſingularly formed by nature, there is conſequently a great difference between the earthen ware of one province and that which is made in another, both in the ſhape and the ſize of the vaſes. In ſome places, vaſes are formed, which are four or five feet in diameter (and ſometimes more) and three feet in depth ; in others, veſſels are manufactured that are four or five feet in height, and have a proportionable circumference. Theſe vaſes, which are called kang, are uſed by the rich as baſons for holding their gold fiſh, flowers, aquatic plants, &c. by the middling claſs of people as reſervoirs for their water, or for containing ſeeds, pulſe, and fruits ; and by tradeſmen and merchants as tubs or kettles. China produces the greater part of the fruits which we have in Europe, and ſeveral other kinds that are peculiar to the country. Apples, pears, prunes, apricots, peaches, quinces, figs, grapes, pomegranates, oranges, walnuts, and cheſnuts, are found every where in abundance ; but the Chineſe have no good ſpecies of cherries. In general, excepting grapes and pomegranates, the fruits which they have in common with us are much inferior to thoſe of Europe. Oranges were firſt brought from China ; and Europe is indebted to the Portugueze for them. The tſe-tſe, which the Portugueze call figs, are a ſpecies of fruit peculiar to China, that grow in almoſt all the provinces. There are different kinds of them. China, in its vaſt extent, contains almoſt every ſpecies of trees that are known to us, the tallow tree, the wax tree, the tſi-chu, or varniſh tree, the tie-ly-mou, or iron-wood, the nan-mou, or Chineſe cedar, the tſe-tan, or roſe-wood, the tchang, or camphor tree, the ſiang, which bears a fruit uſed by the Chineſe dyers as a ſubſtitute for the gall-nut, the lo-ya-ſong, a kind of deciduous pine, whoſe ſap is poiſonous : thoſe who are employed in cutting this tree, muſt take great care that no drops ſpurt out on the ſkin ; for it raiſes bliſters and pimples, which cannot eaſily be cured. If its root, which is of a reddiſh colour, be put into the earth, or water, it ſoon petrifies ; it is then uſed for ſharpening the fineſt and beſt tempered tools. The tchukou, this tree is ſo much the more valuable to the Chineſe, as its inner rind furniſhes them with the greater part of the paper which they conſume. When its branches are broken, the bark peels off in the form of long ribbons. The bamboo, the acacia, the tea-plant. The Chineſe diſtinguiſh ſeveral kinds of tea, which may be reduced to the four following : the ſong-lo, the vou-y, the lou-ngan, and the pou-eul. The firſt takes its name from the mountain Song-lo, ſituated in the province of King-nan, under 30 degrees of north latitude. This mountain is not very extenſive ; but it is entirely covered with theſe ſhrubs, which are alſo cultivated at the bottoms of the neighbouring mountains. The ſong-loo is the ſame which we call green-tea. It is cultivated almoſt like vines, and is cropped at a certain height to prevent it from growing. This ſhrub muſt be renewed every four or five years, becauſe, after that period, its leaves harden and become ſour. The flower which it bears is white, and ſhaped like a ſmall roſe compoſed of five leaves. The ſong-lo may be kept for ſeveral years, and is uſed with great ſucceſs, as a remedy for various diſtempers. The Chineſe of the province of Kiang-nan are the only people who crop the tea-ſhrub ; for every where elſe it is ſuffered to grow to its natural ſize, which ſometimes extends to ten or twelve feet. When the tree is very young, they take care alſo to incline and bend down its branches, that they may collect its leaves afterwards with greater eaſe. This ſhrub grows often on the rugged backs of ſteep mountains, acceſs to which is dangerous, and ſometimes impracticable. The vou-y, which is known in Europe by the name of bohea, grows in the province of Fokien, and takes its name alſo from a mountain called Vou-y, ſituated in the diſtrict of Kienning-fou. The vou-y is the tea moſt eſteemed univerſally throughout the empire. It differs from the ſong-lo in the form and colour of its leaves, which are ſhorter, rounder, and blacker, and which communicate a yellow colour to water, without any harſhneſs. From theſe two firſt kinds of tea, three others are compoſed, the difference of which reſults from the choice of the leaves, and the time when they are gathered. That which contains only the freſh and tender leaves of young trees, is called mao, or imperial tea. This is the moſt delicate, and is that which is tranſported to court for the uſe of the emperor. The ſecond ſort is compoſed of older leaves. It is what is ſold under the name of good vou-y. The reſt of the leaves, that are ſuffered to remain on the tree until they grow larger, form the third kind, which is ſold to the common people at a very cheap rate. The flowers of this ſhrub alſo furniſh another kind of tea ; but thoſe who are deſirous of procuring it muſt beſpeak it, and pay an exorbitant price for it. The lou-ngan, which is the third kind of tea before mentioned, grows in the neighbourhood of the city of Lou-ngan-tcheou. It differs in nothing from the ſong-lo, either in the configuration of its leaves, or the manner in which it is cultivated, but it has none of its noxious qualities. The fourth kind is procured from a village named Pou-eul, ſituated in the province of Yunnan, on the frontiers of the kingdoms of Pegu, Ava, Laos, and Tong-king. This village is become conſiderable by its commerce : people reſort to it from all parts : but the entrance of it is forbidden to ſtrangers, who are permitted to approach no nearer than the bottoms of the mountains, to receive the quantity of tea which they want. The trees that produce this tea are tall and buſhy ; they are planted irregularly, and grow without any cultivation. Their leaves are longer and thicker than thoſe of the ſong-lo and vou-y ; they are rolled up in the ſame manner as tobacco, and formed into maſſes, which are ſold at a dear rate. This kind of tea is much uſed in the provinces of Yunnan and Koei-tcheou. When the tea-leaves have been collected, they are expoſed to the ſteam of boiling-water, after which they are put upon plates of copper, and held over the fire until they become dry and ſhrivelled, and appear ſuch as we have them in Europe. The cotton-tree (cotton forms one of the moſt conſiderable branches of the commerce of China) is cultivated with ſucceſs in the ſouthern provinces. Among the medicinal plants are rhubarb, caſſia, and ginſeng. The tai-hoang, or rhubarb, grows in ſeveral provinces of the empire, but the beſt is that of Se-tchuen, which is conſidered as much ſuperior to that of Chen-ſi of Thibet. The ſtem of rhubarb reſembles a ſmall bamboo, or Chineſe cane ; it is hollow, and exceedingly brittle ; it riſes to the height of three or four feet, and is of a duſky violet colour. The flowers of this plant are yellow, and ſometimes violet, and the ſeed of the ſize of a grain of millet. The moſt eſteemed and valuable of all the plants is gin-ſeng, which the Mantchew Tartars call orhota, the queen of plants. The Chineſe phyſicians always ſpeak of it with a kind of enthuſiaſm, and enumerate, without end, the wonderful properties which they aſcribe to it. The mountains and vaſt foreſts of China abound with wild animals of every ſpecies; ſuch as the rhinoceros, elephants, leopards, tygers, bears, wolves, foxes, buffaloes, camels, horſes, wild mules, &c. Some beavers, ſables, and ermines, are found in the northern provinces; but the ſkins which they furniſh are much inferior to thoſe procured from Siberia. Game is very common in China. The ſquares of Peking, during winter, are filled with different heaps of various kinds of volatile, terreſtrial, and aquatic animals, hardened by cold, and perfectly ſecure againſt all corruption. Prodigious quantities of ſtags, deer, wild boars, goats, elks, hares, rabbits cats, ſquirrels, and wild rats; geeſe, ducks, partridges, pheaſants, and quails, are ſeen there, together with ſeveral other kinds of game, that are not to be found in Europe. A kind of tyger is ſeen in China which has a body like a dog, but no tail, remarkably ſwift and ferocious. Camels, both wild and domeſtic, are found in the north eaſt parts of China. There are ſeveral ſpecies of Apes in China. Thoſe named ſin-ſin, differ from the reſt in their ſize, which is equal to that of an ordinary man. They walk with facility on their hind legs, and all their actions have a ſingular conformity to our's. The moſt beautiful quadruped of China is a ſtag, which is never larger or ſmaller than one of our middle ſized dogs. The princes and mandarins buy them at an exceſſive price, and keep them as curioſities in their gardens. China poſſeſſes a valuable animal, which is not to be found any where elſe: it is the hiang-tchang-tſe, or muſk deer. This animal is very common, and is met with, not only in the ſouthern provinces, but alſo in thoſe which are to the weſt of Peking: it has no horns; and the colour of its hair approaches near to black. The bag which contains its muſk is formed of a very thin membrane, covered with a kind of hair, exceedingly fine and ſoft. The fleſh of this deer is well-taſted, and is ſerved up at the moſt delicate tables. China has birds of every ſpecies; eagles, falcons, pelicans, birds of paradiſe, ſwans, ſtorks, and paroquets, which are inferior to thoſe of the Weſt Indies neither in the variety nor beauty of their plumage, nor in the facility with which they learn to ſpeak. But the moſt beautiful bird of China, and perhaps of the whole world, is the kin-ki, or golden pheaſant. The body of this bird is proportioned with wonderful elegance; and the brilliancy of its plumage ſeems to be the utmoſt effort of the pencil of nature. Nothing can be richer or more variegated than its colours. The ſhades of its wings and tail are a mixture of bright red and yellow, and a beautiful plume waves over its head. The fleſh of this bird is more delicate than that of our pheaſant. The ſmall domeſtic fiſh, which the Chineſe call kin-yu, or gold fiſh, are generally kept for ornament by great people in their courts and gardens, and have of late years been brought to Europe. The ſilk inſects, which are different from ſilk worms, reſemble caterpillars, are found in great numbers on the trees and in the fields of the province of Chang-tong. They propagate without any care, and feed indiſcriminately on the leaves of the mulberry, and on thoſe of other trees. They ſpin their ſilk in filaments and long threads, which being carried away by the wind, are caught by the trees and buſhes that grow in the fields. The Chineſe collect theſe threads, and make a kind of ſtuff of them, called kien-tcheou, which is much inferior in luſtre to thoſe manufactured of common ſilk; but it is, however, much eſteemed in China, and ſold there ſometimes for more than the richeſt ſatin.—No potentate on earth poſſeſſes ſo unlimited power as the ſovereign of this numerous nation All authority is veſted in him, and in him alone. He is the undiſputed maſter of the lives of his ſubjects; yet he ſeldom employs this prerogative but to provide for their ſafety, and promote their happineſs. No ſentence of death pronounced by any of the tribunals can be executed without his conſent. The emperor alone has the diſpoſal of all the offices of ſtate; he appoints viceroys and governors, and changes or removes them at pleaſure. No employment is purchaſed in China; merit, for the moſt part, raiſes to place: and rank is attached to place only. The emperor of China has the right of chooſing a ſucceſſor either among his children or the reſt of his family, and even from among his own ſubjects. The dignity of prince of the blood is generally reverenced in China; yet it is in the emperor's power to prevent thoſe from aſſuming that title who have a natural right to it, and even if they are permitted to enjoy their rank, they have neither influence nor power; they poſſeſs, it is true, a revenue proportioned to their dignity; they are indulged with a palace, officers, and court; but they have leſs authority than the loweſt of the mandarins. The mandarins, whether of letters or of arms, compoſe exactly what is called the nobility. There are only two ranks in China, the nobility and the people; but the former is not hereditary, the emperor alone confers or continues it. Theſe mandarins enjoy a very valuable privilege: they may, in caſes of neceſſity, remonſtrate with the emperor, either individually, or as a body, upon any action or omiſſion on his part, which may be contrary to the intereſts of the empire. Their remonſtrances are ſeldom ill received by the ſovereign; but he reſerves to himſelf the right of paying that attention to them which he thinks they deſerve. The literati are highly honoured in China; and to their influence we may, in a great meaſure, aſcribe the mildneſs and equity of the Chineſe government. A mandarin of arms is far from enjoying the ſame conſideration as a mandarin of letters. The troops of this empire amount to more than 700,000. With regard to the frontiers of this vaſt empire, Nature herſelf hath taken care to fortify them throughout their whole extent. The ſea borders ſix of the provinces; but it is ſo ſhallow towards the ſhore, that large veſſels cannot approach it. Inacceſſible mountains cover it on the weſt, and the remaining part is defended by the great wall. This ſtupendous monument of human art and induſtry exceeds every thing that we read of in ancient hiſtory. The pyramids of Egypt are little, when compared with a wall which covers three large provinces, ſtretches along an extent of 500 leagues, and is of ſuch an enormous thickneſs, that ſix horſemen may eaſily ride abreaſt upon it. Such is this celebrated wall, which is, indeed, the only work of its kind in the world. It is flanked with towers, two bow-ſhots diſtant one from the other, which add to its ſtrength, and render it much eaſier to be defended. One third part of the able bodied men of China were employed in conſtructing this wall. The workmen were ordered under pain of death, to place the materials of which it is compoſed ſo cloſely, that the leaſt entrance might not be left for any inſtrument of iron. This precaution contributed much to the ſolidity of the work, which is ſtill almoſt entire, though built 2000 years ago. It was planned and executed by the firſt emperor of the family of Tſin. The principal ſecret of the Chineſe government is, that the different departments be properly inſpected; that every tranſaction be thoroughly inveſtigated; that ſuitable rewards be given to the deſerving, and that puniſhments be inflicted on the guilty adequate to their crimes. An officer or magiſtrate is appointed for each quarter of a city, who has a certain number of houſes under his inſpection; he is anſwerable for every thing that paſſes in them contrary to good order; and if he neglects to make proper enquiry into any irregularity, or to inform the mandarin governor, he is ſubjected to the ſame puniſhment as thoſe who are refractory. Every father of a family is an inſpector of a different kind. Each is obliged to anſwer for the conduct of his children and domeſtics, and for this reaſon, becauſe he has every kind of authority over them. Strict watch is kept in the day time at every city to obſerve thoſe who enter: for this purpoſe a ſtrong guard is poſted at each gate; the air, looks, and phyſiognomy, of the paſſengers are carefully examined; if on being queſtioned, their accent betrays them, and diſcovers them to be ſtrangers, they are immediately carried before a mandarin: they are even often detained until the will of the governor be known. This precaution is founded on an ancient maxim of the Chineſe not to admit ſtrangers among them. They ſuppoſe, that in proceſs of time, an alteration of manners, cuſtoms, and ceremonies, might reſult from ſuch an intercourſe, and give births to quarrels, party diſputes, and ſedition, and at length overturn the conſtitution. The greater part of the taxes are paid in commodities. Thoſe who breed ſilk-worms pay their taxes in ſilk, the huſbandmen in grain, and the gardeners in fruits, &c. The taxes paid in money ariſe principally from the cuſtoms, and from the ſale of ſalt, which belongs entirely to the emperor; from the duties paid by veſſels on entering any of the ports, and from other impoſts on various branches of manufacture. Theſe excepted, the trader ſcarcely contributes any thing towards the exigences of the ſtate, and the mechanic nothing at all. The weight of the permanent and perſonal taxes fall entirely on the huſbandman. The emperor's revenue amounts to more than forty millions ſterling. Agriculture is the principal and almoſt the only reſource of the Chineſe, and they conſider it as the firſt and moſt honourable of all profeſſions, as it is that from which ſociety derives the greateſt benefit. The huſbandman in China enjoys many and great privileges, while the merchant and mechanic are much leſs eſteemed. Father Amiot, an impartial and able judge of the literature, hiſtory, and ancient monuments of China, gives, in the following words, the reſult of his long and laborious reſearches reſpecting the origin of the Chineſe, and of their primitive religion:—The Chineſe are a diſtinct people, who have ſtill preſerved the characteriſtic marks of their firſt origin; a people whoſe primitive doctrine will be found, by thoſe who take the trouble of examining it thoroughly, to agree in its eſſential parts with the doctrine of the choſen people, before Moſes, by the command of God himſelf, had conſigned the explanation of it to the ſacred records; a people, in a word, whoſe traditional knowledge, when freed from whatever ignorance or ſuperſtition of latter ages has added to it, may be traced back from age to age, and from epocha to epocha, without interruption, for the ſpace of 4000 years, even to the renewal of the human race by the grandſon of Noah. The law has regulated every thing that relates to dreſs, and even fixed the colours that diſtinguiſh the different conditions. The emperor, and princes of the blood, have alone a right to wear yellow; certain mandarins are intitled to wear ſattin of a red ground, but only upon days of ceremony: in general they are clothed in black, blue, or violet. The colour to which the common people are confined is blue or black; and their dreſs is always compoſed of plain cotton cloth. White is the colour for mourning among the Chineſe. A ſon has no right to wear it while his father and mother are alive; but he can

can wear no other for three years after their death; and, even when this triennial mourning is ended, his clothes ever after muſt be of one colour. Fiſhing is conſidered by the Chineſe rather as an object of commerce and induſtry than amuſement. They catch fiſh by various methods: in their great fiſheries they uſe nets; but private people employ a line. They uſe alſo for this purpoſe, in certain provinces, a kind of bird, the plumage of which greatly reſembles that of a raven; but its neck and bill are much longer: the latter is very ſharp and hooked. This bird is trained to catch fiſh, almoſt in the ſame manner as dogs are taught to purſue game. This method of fiſhing is practiſed in boats, great numbers of which may be ſeen on the river about ſun riſing, with the fiſhing birds perched on their prows. The fiſhermen make ſeveral turns with their boats; after which they beat the water very ſtrongly with one of their oars. The cormorants (for this ſeems to be the name proper for theſe birds) upon this ſignal immediately diſperſe themſelves, plunge into the river, and, diving, ſeize by the middle whatever fiſh they can; they then riſe to the ſurface, and each carries its capture to the boat to which it belongs. The fiſherman receives the fiſh, lays hold of the bird, turns its head downwards, and ſtroaking its neck with his hand, makes it diſgorge all thoſe ſmall fiſh it has ſwallowed, and which are prevented from getting into its ſtomach by a ring placed on purpoſe to confine its gullet. When they have done fiſhing, the ring is taken off, and they are then ſuffered to feed. It is very remarkable, that, if any one of the fiſh are too large, theſe birds mutually aſſiſt one another; one takes it by the tail, another by the head, and in this manner they tranſport it to their maſter. The internal commerce of China is immenſe; that of all Europe is by no means to be compared to it; but, on the other hand, its foreign trade is much inferior to that of any of the grand commercial powers of Europe. The great number of canals and rivers by which China is interſected, tend greatly to facilitate the conveyance of every kind of merchandize, and its prodigious population occaſions a rapid ſale. The moſt frequented fairs of Europe afford but a faint picture of that immenſe number of buyers and ſellers, with which the large cities of China are continually crowded. We may almoſt ſay, that the one-half are employed in over-reaching the other. It is, above all, againſt ſtrangers, that the Chineſe merchants exerciſe, without any ſenſe of ſhame, their inſatiable rapacity. The Chineſe are not at all fitted for maritime commerce. Seldom do any of their veſſels ever go beyond the Straits of Sunda. Their longeſt voyages towards Malacca extend only to Acheen; towards the ſtraits, as far as Batavia; and northward, as far as Japan. Their commerce with this iſland, conſidering the articles of exchange which they procure at Camboya, or at Siam, produces them cent. per cent. Their trade with the Manillas is much leſs profitable; their gain, generally, is about 50 per cent. It is rather more conſiderable at Batavia; and the Dutch, beſides, ſpare no pains to invite the Chineſe among them. Chineſe traders go alſo, but leſs frequently, to Acheen, Malacca, Thor, Patan, Ligor, belonging to Siam, and Cochin-china. From theſe places they bring gold and tin, but eſpecially objects of luxury for the table, and ſome other more neceſſary articles. China appears to have been the natural and original country of the ſilk-worm. The art of hatching and breeding ſilk-worms, and of employing the down which they furniſh, in fabricating cloth, has been known in that empire from the remoteſt antiquity; this care formed the occupation of the firſt empreſſes, who, ſurrounded by their women, ſpent their leiſure hours in weaving tiſſues, and ſilk veils, which were reſerved for ſacrifices, and days of grand ceremony. The culture of the mulberry-tree, and the manufacturing of ſilk, have been greatly extended in China: this production, indeed, appears to be almoſt inexhauſtible; beſides the immenſe quantity which is annually exported by the greater part of the Aſiatic and European nations, the internal conſumption alone is aſtoniſhing. The emperor, the princes, the mandarins, the literati, women, ſervants of both ſexes, and, in a word, all thoſe who poſſeſs a moderate income, wear no clothes but taffety, ſatin, and other ſilk ſtuffs. None but the lower ſort of people uſe dreſſes of cotton cloth, which is dyed blue. The principal ſilk ſtuffs manufactured by the Chineſe are plain and flowered gauzes, of which they make dreſſes for ſummer: damaſk of all colours, ſtriped and black ſatins, napped, flowered, ſtriped, clouded, and pinked taffeties; crapes, brocades, pluſh, different kinds of velvet, and a multitude of other ſtuffs, the names of which are unknown in Europe. Porcelain is another object of Chineſe induſtry, and a branch of commerce which employs a vaſt multitude of workmen. The fineſt and beſt porcelain of China is made in a village, called King-te-ching, in the province of Kiang-ſi. This celebrated village is a league and a half in length, and we are aſſured that it contains a million of inhabitants. The workmen of King-te-ching, invited by the attracting allurements of the European trade, have eſtabliſhed manufactures alſo in the provinces of Fo-kien and Canton; but this porcelain is not eſteemed. The emperor Kang-hi was deſirous of having ſome made under his own inſpection at Peking. For this purpoſe he collected workmen, together with tools, and all materials neceſſary; furnaces were alſo erected, but the attempt miſcarried. The village of King-te-ching ſtill continues the moſt celebrated place in the empire for beautiful porcelain, which is tranſported to all parts of the world, and even to Japan. Almoſt all the houſes and buildings of China are conſtructed of wood. This is not owing to a ſcarcity of ſtone or marble, for the greater part of the provinces are ſufficiently abundant in both, and ſeveral cities are paved with marble of all colours; neither is it to be attributed to the difficulty of tranſporting them. All the emperor's gardens are interſperſed with enormous artificial rocks; the foundations of all his palaces conſiſt of immenſe blocks both of marble and alabaſter; and the ſteps of all the ſtairs, however high or broad they may be, are of one ſingle piece. Beſides the dread of earthquakes, there are other reaſons which prevent the Chineſe from building with ſtone or marble; the heat and dampneſs of the ſouthern provinces, and the ſevere cold in thoſe of the north, would render ſuch houſes unwholeſome, and almoſt uninhabitable. The naval architecture of the Chineſe appears to have made no progreſs for ſeveral centuries; neither their frequent intercourſe with thoſe Europeans who have viſited their coaſts, nor the ſight of their veſſels, has made them turn their thoughts to change or improve their own. The veſſels which they name Tchowen, are called by the Portugueze Soma, or Sommes: the largeſt of them are not above 250, or 300 tons burthen, and their length never exceeds 80 or 90 feet; they are, properly ſpeaking, only flat boats with two maſts.

CHINCA, a valley of South America, in Peru, where the ancient incas had formerly built a temple, dedicated to the ſun. It once contained 25,000 inhabitants, now reduced to about 500 families; the town, which gives name to a valley, lies 16 miles N. Piſco.

CHIN-TCHEN, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Chen-ſi: 20 miles N. Tong.

CHINY, a town of the Netherlands, in the duchy of Luxemburg, on the Semoy, the capital of a comté; it was firſt ſurrounded with walls about the year 950, by Arnold de Bourgogne, and was heretofore celebrated for its beauty and riches, but has ſuffered greatly in different wars. The comté is of great extent, including thirteen cities or capital towns, viz. Baſtiogne, Chiny, Dicrich, Durbuy, Honfalize, Marche-en-Famine, Neufchateau, Roche, St. Hubert, St. Vit, Schleyden in the dioceſe of Tevres, Vianden, and Virton, withall the villages depending thereon; in a word, this comté comprehends more than ſome maps deſcribe under the name of the duchy of Luxemburg. A peaſant of Condroz, being aſked what was the extent of the comté of Chiny, anſwered very ingenuouſly, he had heard at Metz that it comprehended one half of the world, and that the other half was dependent on it. Neither the city nor comté are dependant on the duchy of Luxemburg, having its own particular juriſdiction.

tien. The comté ſometimes is called Imperial, and has been at all times conſiderable. Bruno, the 27th archbiſhop of Cologn, and chancellor of the empire, erected it into a comté, about the ſame time the city was ſurrounded with walls. It paſſed afterwards to the houſe of Looz, by the marriage of Jane, comteſſe de Chiny, with Arnold, comte de Looz, whoſe youngeſt ſon Louis became comte of Chiny; but he dying without a ſon, the comté paſſed to Thierry, lord of Hinſberg, and afterwards to Margaret, only daughter of Louis, comte of Chiny, and Jeanne de Blamont. After the death of Margaret, widow of John, duke of Lorrain, who died in 1732, without children, the comté paſſed to Charles IV. emperor and comte of Luxemburg, who inveſted his brother Wenceſlaus with the ſovereignty, united with the duchy of Luxemburg, only reſerving the title in all public acts, which was obſerved till the comté was yielded to France, in the year 1681, under the pretext that it was a fief of the duchy of Bar. It at preſent belongs to the houſe of Auſtria, being adjudged to it by the treaty of Ryſwick: 5 leagues W. Arlon, and 9 W. Luxemburg.

CINQUE PORTS, ſeaports of England, ſo called, ſituated on the coaſts of Kent and Suſſex: Dover, Sandwich, Haſtings, Hithe, Romney, Winchelſea, Rye, and Seaford. They were originally only five, the three latter, which were at firſt only members, having been declared ports ſubſequent to the firſt inſtitution. They are under a lord warden, and were endowed with conſiderable privileges, being engaged to ſupply government with a number of veſſels properly manned at 40 days notice, and provide proviſions and pay for 15 days; after which time, if continued in ſervice, the crew was to be paid by the king. They are all borough towns, ſending each two members to the Britiſh parliament, under the title of barons of the Cinque Ports.

CIRCAR, a name given in Hindooſtan to a tract of country, which, in the opinion of major Rennel, is not very diſſimilar to the term County in England, few of them being of leſs extent than the largeſt English county.

CIRCARS (Northern), theſe are five circars, lying to the north of the Carnatic, or Madras: Cicacole, Condapilly, Ellore, Rajamundry, and Guntoor; the firſt four are in the hands of the Engliſh, the latter belongs to the Nizam. The firſt four occupy the ſea coaſt, from the Chilka Lake on the confines of Cattack, to the northern bank of the Kiſtnah river, forming, comparatively, a long, narrow ſlip of country, 350 miles long, and from 20 to 75 wide. The nature of the country is ſuch as to be eaſily defenſible againſt an Indian enemy, it having a barrier of mountains and extenſive foreſts on one ſide, and the ſea on the other; the extremities only being open. Its greateſt defect is in point of relative ſituation to Bengal and Madras: it being 350 Britiſh miles from the firſt, and 250 from the latter; ſo that the troops deſtined to protect it, cannot be reckoned on for any preſſing ſervice that may ariſe at either preſidency. The circars, in point of ſtrictneſs, appertain partly to Golconda (or the Deccan) and partly to Oriſſa; and are held of the Nizam, on condition of paying him a ſtipulated quit-rent. When the French took poſſeſſion of the five circars in 1753, they were valued at about 43 lacks of rupees per annum. The Engliſh never poſſeſſed Guntoor, which was eſtimated at near ſeven lacks of the above ſum; ſo that 36 lacks (360,000l.) ſhould be taken for the true value of the Engliſh poſſeſſion in the circars. In 1784, they were reckoned to produce about that ſum.

CIRCASSIA, a country of Aſia, bounded on the north by the river Don, on the eaſt by the Caſpian Sea and the mouths of the Volga, on the ſouth by Mount Caucaſus and the Black Sea, and on the weſt by part of the Black Sea and the Lake of Azoph. It was formerly governed by ſeveral independent princes, but is now almoſt wholly ſubject to Ruſſia, and included in the government of Caucaſus. The Circaſſians are in general well made, and excellent horſemen; the women generally handſome. Their principal traffic is in ſlaves, honey, wax, ſkins of cattle, deer, and tygers. They have no money, and all their commerce is by exchange. The Circaſſians were formerly Chriſtians; but, for want of inſtruction and written laws, they content themſelves with a bare profeſſion of being Chriſtians or Mahometans.

COLCHAGUA, or Collagua, a town of South America, and capital of a juriſdiction, in the country of Chili.

COLCHESTER, a town of England, in the county of Eſſex, on the river Coln, which formerly contained 15 churches, and now 12, moſt of which are in good repair, with a caſtle in the centre of the town, ſaid to have been built by Edward, ſon of Alfred, when he repaired Colcheſter after the ravages of the war: ſuppoſed to have been a Roman ſtation, and is ſaid to have been the birth-place of Helena, mother of the emperor Conſtantine. In the concluſion of the civil war it ſuffered a ſevere ſiege, which, as it made a reſolute defence, was turned into a blockade, wherein the garriſon, and inhabitants alſo, ſuffered the utmoſt extremity of hunger, and were at laſt obliged to ſurrender at diſcretion; and their two chief officers, Sir Charles Lucas and Sir George Liſle, were cruelly ſhot to death under the caſtle wall for their bravery. The battered walls, the breaches in the turrets, and the ruined churches, ſtill ſhow marks of this ſiege, except that the church of St. Mary (where was the royal fort) is rebuilt; but the ſteeple, which was two-thirds battered down (the beſieged having a large culverin upon it, which did much execution) remains ſtill in that condition. The lines of contravallation, which ſurrounded the whole town, and the forts of the beſiegers, remain very viſible in many places. The river Colne, which paſſes through the town, encompaſſes it on the north and eaſt; and ſerved, in time of war, for a complete defence on thoſe ſides. There are three bridges over it, and it is navigable, within three miles of the town, for ſhips of large burden; a little lower it may even receive a royal navy; and up to that part called the Hythe, cloſe up to the houſes, it is navigable for hoys and ſmall barks. The Hythe is a long ſtreet, paſſing from weſt to eaſt, on the ſouth ſide of the town, and is ſo populous towards the river, that it may be called the Wapping of Colcheſter. There is one church in that part of the town, a large quay by the river, and a good cuſtom-houſe. This town chiefly ſubſiſts by making baize, tho', indeed, all the towns around carry on the ſame trade; as Kilverdon, Witham, Coggeſhall, Braintree, Boeking, &c. and the whole county, large as it may be ſaid to be, employed, and in part maintained, by the ſpinning of wool for the baize trade of Colcheſter and its adjacent villages. The town of Colcheſter has been ſuppoſed to contain about 40,000 people, including the out-villages within its liberty, of which there are many, the liberty of the town being of a large extent. The markets are on Wedneſdays and Saturdays. This place ſends two members to parliament, and is governed by a mayor, recorder, town-clerk, twelve aldermen, eighteen aſſiſtants, eighteen common-council, two coroners, four ſerjeants, and two claiers. The mayor and aldermen for the time being, with forty-eight guardians, are alſo a corporation for the benefit of the poor. It is a liberty of itſelf, containing four wards, and ſixteen pariſhes within and without the walls: 18 miles SSW. Ipſwich, and 51 NE. London. Long. 0. 59. E. Greenwich. Lat. 51. 53. N.

COLCHESTER, a town of England, in the county of Eſſex, on the river Coln, which formerly contained 15 churches, and now 12, moſt of which are in good repair, with a caſtle in the centre of the town, ſaid to have been built by Edward, ſon of Alfred, when he repaired Colcheſter after the ravages of the war: ſuppoſed to have been a Roman ſtation, and is ſaid to have been the birth-place of Helena, mother of the emperor Conſtantine. In the concluſion of the civil war it ſuffered a ſevere ſiege, which, as it made a reſolute defence, was turned into a blockade, wherein the garriſon, and inhabitants alſo, ſuffered the utmoſt extremity of hunger, and were at laſt obliged to ſurrender at diſcretion; and their two chief officers, Sir Charles Lucas and Sir George Liſle, were cruelly ſhot to death under the caſtle wall for their bravery. The battered walls, the breaches in the turrets, and the ruined churches, ſtill ſhow marks of this ſiege, except that the church of St. Mary (where was the royal fort) is rebuilt; but the ſteeple, which was two-thirds battered down (the beſieged having a large culverin upon it, which did much execution) remains ſtill in that condition. The lines of contravallation, which ſurrounded the whole town, and the forts of the beſiegers, remain very viſible in many places. The river Colne, which paſſes through the town, encompaſſes it on the north and eaſt; and ſerved, in time of war, for a complete defence on thoſe ſides. There are three bridges over it, and it is navigable, within three miles of the town, for ſhips of large burden; a little lower it may even receive a royal navy; and up to that part called the Hythe, cloſe up to the houſes, it is navigable for hoys and ſmall barks. The Hythe is a long ſtreet, paſſing from weſt to eaſt, on the ſouth ſide of the town, and is ſo populous towards the river, that it may be called the Wapping of Colcheſter. There is one church in that part of the town, a large quay by the river, and a good cuſtom-houſe. This town chiefly ſubſiſts by making baize, tho', indeed, all the towns around carry on the ſame trade; as Kilverdon, Witham, Coggeſhall, Braintree, Boeking, &c. and the whole county, large as it may be ſaid to be, employed, and in part maintained, by the ſpinning of wool for the baize trade of Colcheſter and its adjacent villages. The town of Colcheſter has been ſuppoſed to contain about 40,000 people, including the out-villages within its liberty, of which there are many, the liberty of the town being of a large extent. The markets are on Wedneſdays and Saturdays. This place ſends two members to parliament, and is governed by a mayor, recorder, town-clerk, twelve aldermen, eighteen aſſiſtants, eighteen common-council, two coroners, four ſerjeants, and two claviers. The mayor and aldermen for the time being, with forty-eight guardians, are alſo a corporation for the benefit of the poor. It is a liberty of itſelf, containing four wards, and ſixteen pariſhes within and without the walls: 18 miles SSW. Ipſwich, and 51 NE. London. Long. 0. 59. E. Greenwich. Lat. 51. 53. N.

COLOGN, an electoral biſhopric of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, divided into ſeveral diſtricts by other eſtates, the greater part is ſituated upon the Rhine, between the duchies of Juliers and Berg ; another part is ſituated between Juliers and Treves ; the duchies of Recklinghauſen and and Weſtphalia form another. It takes its name from the city of Cologn. The ſoil is unequal ; being compoſed of mountains and foreſts, ſandy lands and fertile fields : there is plenty of game, fiſh, and mineral ſprings, and vineyards, from which is made excellent wine. It contains 72 towns and cities, the ſtates are compoſed of prelates, nobles, and cities ; the aſſemblies are held at Bonn. The inhabitants are Roman Catholics in general. Cologn was a biſhopric in the year 314, and was erected into an archbiſhopric, in the year 799, by Charlemagne, with the biſhoprics of Liege, Munſter, and Oſnabruck, for ſuffragans, but enjoying no ſpiritual power over the latter. The archbiſhop of Cologn has long ſince borne the pallium and the croſs, and takes the title of born legate of the holy ſee, and acrh-chancellor of the ſacred empire for Italy. He gives his vote after the elector of Treves, and ſits at the right hand of the emperor at aſſemblies held in his own dioceſe, in Gaul, or in Italy. The metropolitan church and chapter are at Cologn ; the chapter is compoſed of 25 canons and 36 dignitaries, all of which are princes or counts, except 8 doctors : the electorate pays 1828 florins for a Roman month, and is taxed for the Imperial chamber 811 crowns 58 kruitzers for each term.

COLOGN, a free and Imperial city of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and capital of the archbiſhopric to which it gives name. It is built in the form of a creſcent, on the borders of the Rhine, and fortified in the ancient manner. They reckon at Cologn 34 gates, 10 collegiate and 49 pariſh churches, 4 abbies, 56 convents, 16 hoſpitals, and 56 chapels. The Proteſtants hold their religious aſſemblies at Millheim, a ſmall town dependent on the duchy of Berg. Cologne acknowledges the power of the archbiſhop in ſpirituals, but not as a prince ; and on his inauguration he takes an oath to maintain the rights and immunities ; nay, the inhabitants pretend that he cannot reſide in the city three days without permiſſion. The ſtreets are narrow, winding and gloomy, and the city, though well ſituated on the Rhine for commerce, is not populous. The principal manufacture is that of ribbons. The government is ſaid to be formed on the model of the Roman republic ; the city pays 1100 florins for the Roman month, and 405 rixdollars ſeventy-two kruitzers to the Imperial chamber. The military force conſiſts of four companies of ſoldiers. The French, after the defeat of general Clairfayt, entered Cologn on the 6th of October, 1794, and were received rather as friends than enemies. The inhabitants, it is ſaid, preſſed upon them with the moſt unequivocal tokens of joy and admiration. The magiſtrates had previouſly ſent four deputies to the French general to deprecate the admiſſion of light troops within the walls ; the requeſt was granted, and he entered only at the head of 4000 men. Very few of the inhabitants left the place ; the perſons and property of all who remained were in the moſt perfect ſecurity ; and the ſecular clergy were permitted the free exerciſe of their functions : 65 miles NNE. COMINES, a town of Flanders, ſituated on the Lis, which divides it in two parts. This town is greatly reduced from its former grandeur by accidents and war. In the year 1450, great part of it was burnt down, together with the caſtle, but the whole was rebuilt ſome years after. In the year 1585, the garriſon from Oſtend burnt it almoſt entirely down, except the caſtle. In 1645, marechal de Gaſſion made himſelf maſter of the caſtle, but the archduke Leopold retook it in 1648. In 1657, the marechal de Turenne, after defeating a body of troops commanded by the prince de Ligne, at Bouſbeeck, took it and gave it up to pillage. Two years after, it was reſtored to Spain at the treaty of the Pyrenées; but the French again ſeized it in 1672, and razed the fortifications both of the town and caſtle. Philip de Comines, author of the celebrated Memoirs of his own Time, was born of an illuſtrious family in this place: 25 miles S. Bruges, and 7 N. Moſt writers ſuppoſe that Commendo abounds in gold mines, but that the king, fearful of exciting the avarice of Europeans, prevents their being wrought.

COMMENDO (Grand), or Guaſſo, a town of Africa, capital of the kingdom of Commendo, and reſidence of the king, ſituated at ſome diſtance from tbe coaſt. It is well inhabited and large, containing about 400 houſes: 4 miles N. Little Commendo.

COMMENDO (Little), a town of Africa, ſituated on the Gold Coaſt, cloſe to the ſhore of the Atlantic; it was once a place of great note, and one of the fineſt towns of Guinea. At preſent, it exhibits only the remains of a once flouriſhing great city. Here the natives are in general turbulent, cunning, and deceitful; much addicted to lying and ſtealing. Their employment conſiſts either in fiſhing or in commerce, and their neighbours employ them as brokers and factors. Every morning 70 or 80 large canoes may be ſeen upon the coaſt fiſhing or trading, with the European ſhipping in the road. About the middle of the day they put to ſhore, when the ſouth-weſt winds begin to blow, both for facility of unloading, and for ſecuring a market for their cargoes either at Great or Little Commendo, where the inland negroes aſſemble with the commodities of their ſeveral countries. No markets on earth are better ſupplied with all ſorts of grain, roots, pulſe, and fiſh, than theſe, nor at a more reaſonable price. Here the Engliſh and Dutch have forts. Long. 0. 34. E. COMO, a town of Italy, and capital of a diſtrict, in the Milaneſe, built by the Gauls, under the conduct of Brennus, at the ſouth end of a lake to which it gives name, pleaſantly ſituated in a plain, almoſt ſurrounded with mountains, large, populous, and commercial; it is the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Goritz, and contains 12 pariſh churches. The town is ſurrounded by a wall, guarded with pictureſque towers, and backed by a conical eminence, on which ſtand the ruins of an ancient caſtle. The houſes are neatly built of ſtone; and the cathedral is a handſome edifice of white marble, hewn from the neighbouring quarries. The inhabitants have eſtabliſhed ſeveral manufactures of cotton and ſilk, and carry on ſome trade with the Griſons. This town was the birth place of the younger Pliny, and the inhabitants have placed his ſtatue on the outſide of one of the churches, with a Latin inſcription, bearing the date of 1499: 20 miles N. Milan. Long. 26. 34. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 44. N.

COMO (Lake of), a lake of Italy, in the Milaneſe, about 9 leagues in length from north to ſouth, and hardly 1 wide; towards the ſouth it is divided into two branches, at the end of one ſtands Como, and at the end of the other Lecco. The river Adda paſſes through it, and ſeveral towns and villages are ſituated on its banks, which are adorned with vines, cheſnuts, and almond-trees.

CONCAN, a country of Aſia, ſituated on the weſtern coaſt of the peninſula of India, between Bombay and Goa, ſeparated from the reſt of the continent by a ridge of mountains called the Gauts. When the Moguls ſeized on Hindooſtan, they found this coaſt infeſted with pirates, and fitted out a fleet to protect their veſſels. The Mahrattas, irritated at ſeeing their piracies interrupted, armed againſt the Moguls, ravaged their poſſeſſions, and fitted out a fleet to protect their pirates. Conagy Angria, who by his courage had arrived at the ſupreme command, was named governor of Severndroog, one of the beſt fortreſſes on the coaſt, where he formed an independent ſtate, and in a little time extended his dominions for the ſpace of 40 leagues along the coaſt, and 6 leagues wide towards the mountains. His ſucceſſors took the name of Angria, and made peace with the Mahrattas on paying an annual tribute. They continued to make depredations on the coaſt, and ſeize all veſſels that paſſed that way till the year 1756, when their fleet was deſtroyed, and the ſtrong fort of Gheria, where the chief reſided, was taken, by admiral Watſon and colonel Clive; the country now belongs to the Mahrattas. The principal towns are Choul, Fort Victoria, Dabul, Severndroog, Gheria, Tamana, and Sunderdoo.

Condé, a town of France, in the department of the North, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Valenciennes, ſituated at the conflux of the Haiſne and the Scheldt. This town was inveſted by a large body of the allied army in the month of April, 1793, and the works completed on the 27th. The town, though ſtrong, was not furniſhed with proviſions ſufficient for a ſiege: the governor (general Chancel) therefore, about this period, ordered the women and children to quit the place; but the prince of Wurtemberg compelled them again to take refuge in that fortreſs. In a few days after this unſucceſsful attempt, the governor ſent them out a ſecond time; but the Auſtrians, after killing many of theſe defenceleſs creatures, even in the act of ſupplieating for mercy, forced the governor, from motives of humanity, once more to receive them. From this period the garriſon appear to have exiſted in a ſtate of extreme diſtreſs. On the 10th of July, the garriſon, after enduring all the rigours of famine, were obliged to ſurrender as priſoners of war. They had originally amounted to 4000 men, but at the time of the capture were reduced to 1500 fit for ſervice. It was retaken in the month of October, 1794, and, by a decree of the French national aſſembly, it was ordered, that from henceforth the town ſhould be called Nord Libre: 2 leagues NNE. Valenciennes, 4 SE. Tournay, and 4½ W. Mons. Long. 21. 15. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 27. N.

CONGO, or Kongo, a kingdom of Africa, bounded on the north by the kingdoms of Loango and Anziko, on the eaſt by Metambo, and on the ſouth by Angola. The climate is hot in ſummer, the winters are mild as the fineſt ſprings of Italy. Snow never falls, unleſs upon the higheſt mountains; ice is unknown; their days and nights are almoſt always equal. In the winter the rain ſometimes falls very heavy, ſo as to inundate the country. The ſoil is good, and generally produces two crops in a year. The men are averſe from labour, which they commit to their ſlaves, or, from want of ſuch, to their wives, who cultivate the ground, ſow, dig and reap. The principal corn uſed by them is maize, they have likewiſe peas and beans of different kinds. Of fruit trees they have ſcarce any but what were introduced by the Portugueze. Among the trees are the aliconda, of ſuch a monſtrous bulk that ten men cannot fathom it; the bark of this tree macerated yields a coarſe thread, of which they make ropes, the ſhell or rind of the fruit, which is like a gourd, being cleared of its pulp, ſerves for veſſels for various uſes; the inſanda tree, the bark of which being beaten and macerated, makes a thread finer than the aliconda: the mangloſs, a tree whoſe branches bend forwards, and taking root, form new trees, ſo that one ſingle tree may make a whole foreſt. There are ſeveral kind of palms, the moſt common of which is that whoſe fruit contains a great many kernels, of an exquiſite taſte when full ripe, which, when preſſed, produces oil, uſed inſtead of butter; they draw from theſe trees, by inciſion, a vinous liquor, which turns ſour in five or ſix days. Vines brought here from Candia, where they have been well cultivated, yield excellent grapes twice a year. Among the aromatic plants, are the dondo, a ſhrub which ſerves for cinnamon, and the inquoffo, a kind of creeping vine, which bear ſeeds like pepper. Lilies, tulips, tuberoſes, hyacinths, &c. are exquiſitely beautiful, and grow naturally in the fields, vallies, and woods. The graſs in the low lands grows ſo high, thick, and rank, that it becomes a dangerous receptacle to wild beaſts and reptiles. Among the animals are elephants of a monſtrous ſize, lions, leopards, tygers, wolves, zebras, buffaloes, &c. The dante is an animal which ſeems peculiar to this country; it is ſhaped and coloured much like an ox, though not ſo large; its horns are like thoſe of an he-goat, but very ſmooth and ſhining, and of a blackiſh hue, of which the natives make great variety of pretty baubles. The ſkin of this creature is commonly bought by the Portugueze, and ſent into Germany, to be tanned and made into targets, which are then called dantes. The natives uſe the raw hides dried to make their ſhields, which are ſo tough, that no arrow or dart can go through them, and large enough to cover the whole body. The creature which they call impangazza, hath two horns growing out of the forehead, and in other reſpects is not unlike the buffalo. The nſoſſi is of the bigneſs of a cat, of an aſh colour, and hath two ſmall horns on its head. It is, perhaps, the moſt fearful creature that lives, ever in motion, and ſtarting at the leaſt noiſe or breath of air; even when it is drinking, it ſwallows one ſingle gulp, and runs away, as if purſued, and returns with the like fear, till it hath ſatiated its thirſt; it doth the ſame when browzing on the graſs at every blade it takes in its mouth. Its fleſh has an exquiſite taſte, and the natives prefer its ſkin to that of any other creature to make ſtrings for their bows. The nſima, or civet cat, is the true creature from which that odoriferous drug is taken, and, when genuine, valued at the rate of gold duſt: the hunting of it is dangerous, by reaſon of its ſtrength and nimbleneſs, and its dreadful biting when it is caught. The ſura is a kind of land rat, which burrows under ground like moles. The fleſh is ſo exquiſite, that a feaſt among the grandees would be looked upon defective without it. The foreſts alſo abound with wild dogs, which, like the wolves, prey upon the tame cattle, and are ſo fierce, that they will fly upon armed men, and attack whole droves of cows, goats, or ſheep. Their teeth are exceeding keen and ſharp; they never bark, but make a dreadful howling when hungry, or in purſuit of their prey. Another ſingular quadruped, which never ſets its feet upon the ground but it dies ſoon after, keeps itſelf conſtantly upon the trees. It is called entiengia, and is very ſmall, and its ſkin ſo beautifully ſpotted, that none but the kings of Congo, the princes of the blood, and ſuch nobles as obtain the privilege from him, have the liberty of wearing it. And even the kings of Loango, Cacongo, and Gey, receive that extraordinary fur as a conſiderable preſent, and a particular favour. Oſtriches are of ſurpriſing magnitude and beauty, and in great plenty. Their feathers, mixed with thoſe of the peacocks, which are here no leſs numerous and beautiful, are uſed inſtead of enſigns and ſtandards, and made into umbrellas. There are a great variety of parrots, but the moſt eſteemed birds of all are thoſe which they ſtyle, by way of excellence, the birds of muſic. They are ſomewhat bigger than Canary birds, their bills red, their feathers of the ſame colour; ſome of them, however, are green, or mixed, and only their bills and feet black, others are grey, others dun, and ſome all white, or all black; which laſt ſort is the moſt admired for the ſweetneſs of its note, but much more ſo for ſome articulate ſounds they give, which would incline one to believe, that they ſpeak as well as ſing. The fiſh kind is in this part likewiſe, as in other maritime countries, in great plenty and variety, both from the ſea, and from the multitude of rivers, which we have deſcribed. The pico marina, ſo called from the reſemblance of its mouth to the beak of a woodpecker, is a ſea fiſh of a large ſize, and prodigious ſtrength. It hath four fins on its back, three under its belly, and one on each ſide of its head; its tail is large and forked, by which it cuts the waves with ſurpriſing force and velocity. It is at war with every fiſh that ſwims, and with every thing it meets in its way, without being intimidated by the largeſt veſſels. The corvo marino, or ſea raven, is about ſix feet long, and big in proportion. They are likewiſe infeſted with a vaſt variety of ſerpents, ſome of them of a monſtrous length and thickneſs; rattle-ſnakes, vipers, and other venomous reptiles, whoſe bite is immediate death, if ſome powerful antidote be not ſpeedily applied. Scorpions, and other venomous inſects, both flying and reptile, are here likewiſe in great variety. The moſt pernicious and dangerous kind is the ant, or piſmire, of which they reckon no leſs than ſix different ſpecies, of different colours and ſizes, and all of them formidable, both on account of their prodigious number, and the miſchiefs they do, not only to the fruits of the earth, but even to men and beaſts, whom they will ſurround in the night in ſuch ſwarms, that they will eat them to the very bone. Some of them infeſt the houſes in ſuch numbers, as to undermine the very foundations, and plague all kinds of inmates, almoſt, and ſometimes quite, to death. Others lay ſo thick upon the paths and highways, that one cannot move a ſtep without treading upon them, and having one's legs and thighs almoſt devoured by them. A third ſort, of a white and red colour, though very ſmall, will gnaw their way through the hardeſt wood, penetrate into a ſtrong cheſt, and, in a little while, devour all the clothes, linen, and every thing that is in it, except metals and ſtones. A fourth ſort, ſmall and black, leave a moſt intolerable ſtench upon every thing they touch, whether clothes or houſehold ſtuff, which are not eaſily ſweetened again. A fifth ſort harbours chiefly upon the leaves and branches of trees; and if a man chance to climb up to ſave himſelf from a wild beaſt, he is ſo tormented by them, that nothing but the dread of the jaws of the one could make him undergo the ſtings of the other. The ſixth and laſt ſort is of the flying kind, which live wholly under ground, till age furniſhes them with wings to fly; and then they riſe in ſuch ſwarms as darken the air,. in the ſame manner as locuſts. Amidſt a great variety of theſe pernicious flying inſects, they have one ſpecies of a more friendly and profitable kind, viz. the induſtrious bee, which furniſhes the inhabitants with excellent honey and wax in ſuch prodigious plenty, that there is ſcarcely a hollow tree, cliff of a rock, or cleft of the earth, in which they do not find great quantities of their combs. Congo is divided into ſeveral provinces. St. Salvadore, or Banza, is the capital. The principal rivers are the Zaire, the Dando, the Coanza, the Vambra, and the Barbela. Long. 14. to 21. E. Greenwich. Lat 3. to 8. 30. S.

CONI, a town of Italy, in the principality of Piedmont, ſituated on the Stura, ſaid to be firſt founded in 1520, during the pontificate of Caliſtus II. The origin of the town is ſaid to be this: the inhabitants of ſome villages had been ſorely oppreſſed by their lords, who, among other enormities, pretended a privilege granted by the emperor to deflower the brides before their huſbands touched them; the people at length attacked their lords, expelled them the country, and deſtroyed their caſtles, which had ſerved them as a protection for their enormities, and, leſt their tyrants ſhould return with foreign aid, they left their home, and founded Coni. Their numbers daily increaſing, they formed an alliance with the city of Aſti, and Luchin, duke of Milan, and became a flouriſhing republic, which form of government continued ſome years. At length they ſubmitted to Charles of Anjou, comte of Provence. Some time after his death, they came under Jane, queen of Naples, who being incapable of ſupporting the weight of government, the town of Coni, for protection, valuntarily ſubmitted to Amadeus VI. comte of Savoy; to which it has ſince continued faithful. It has been frequently beſieged, firſt in 1515, by the Swiſs, under Francis Stampa, a gentleman of Milan, to open a certain road to Francis I. who was then entering Italy, with a numerous army, to make war on the confederate princes. The unſhaken courage of the inhabitants appeared for the firſt time on this occaſion, for while other ſtronger towns of Piedmont ſurrendered, either to capitulation or force, Coni alone remained, and reſiſted all the attacks of the enemy. In the year 1542, it was again beſieged by Claude Annebaud, admiral of France, whom Francis I. out of hatred to the duke of Savoy, had ſent with an army of 18,000 men to lay waſte Piedmont; the beſieged had only 300 foot and 50 horſe; the French battered the town for the ſpace of ſix days, without intermiſſion, with 18 pieces of heavy cannon, and did conſiderable miſchief to the walls and the moſt elevated buildings of the place, but after loſing about 400 men killed, and many wounded, they were compelled to raiſe the ſiege. Fifteen years after that marechal Briſſac, one of the moſt experienced commanders of his time, who commanded the French army in Italy, attacked Coni moſt vigorouſly, but with no better ſucceſs; this ſiege continued 58 days, 52 pieces of cannon playing without interruption on the walls of the town, which began to give way; but ſome new troops arriving from the Imperial army, the marechal Briſſac was compelled to retire, after having had 4000 men killed or wounded. In the year 1639, it was beſieged by the cardinal Valette and the duke of Longueville, during the civil wars which agitated Piedmont, without ſucceſs; nor did the comte of Harcourt ſucceed any better two years after, though he beſieged the place 54 days. It was again beſieged by the French in 1696, and in 1706. In 1705, the ducheſs of Savoy retired to Coni during the ſiege of Turin. In 1744, it was beſieged by the French and Spaniſh troops, who were however compelled to raiſe the ſiege. In conſequence of the rapid ſucceſſes of the French in Piedmont during the months of April and May, 1796, the king of Sardinia found it neceſſary to make overtures for peace, and placed Coni, with Alexandria, Suza, and Tortona, into the hands of the French, as hoſtages of his good faith: 31 miles S. Turin. Long. 25. 18. E. Ferro. Lat. 44. 22. N.—In April, 1796, this town, with Ceva and Tortona, were put into the hands of the French by the king of Sardinia, as hoſtages of good faith in a propoſed peace.

CONNECTICUT, one of the ſtates of United America, bounded on the north by Maſſachuſetts, on the eaſt by the ſtate of Rhode Iſland, on the ſouth by the Sound, which ſeparates it from Long Iſland, and on the weſt by the ſtate of New York. Its ſhape is nearly a long ſquare, except towards the ſouth-weſt, a ſmall tract, about 12 miles long, and 8 or 9 wide; its length from eaſt to weſt, 72 miles, and breadth, from north to ſouth, 45. The climate is healthy, though ſubject to frequent changes of weather, eſpecially on the ſea-coaſt; the winters are generally very ſevere, and the ſummers very hot. It is compoſed of mountains, hills and vallies, with a great number of rivers, large and ſmall, and is divided into eight counties, Hertford, Newhaven, New London, Fairfield, Windham, Litchfield, Middleſex, and Tollen. The principal productions are maize, wheat, barley, oats, flax, hemp, potatoes, pulſe, and fruits of different kinds, with plenty of meadow and paſture land. The inhabitants fatten a great number of cattle and ſwine: the butter and cheeſe are ſaid to be equal to the beſt of Europe. The principal trade of Connecticut is with the Weſt

India iſlands; the principal exports are horſes, mules, oxen, beef, pork, maize, ſtaves, hoops, pine-boards, oak-plank, &c. To the other American ſtates they ſend pork, corn, butter, cheeſe, cider, apples, pot and pearl-aſhes, flax-ſeed, &c. The number of inhabitants, in the year 1790, was 237,946, of theſe 2764 were ſlaves, the inhabitants are moſtly of Engliſh deſcent, and are Independents in religion. The principal towns are Hartford, Newhaven, New London, Norwich, Middleton, and Weathersfield; the principal rivers are Connecticut, Houſatonick, and Thames. Academies have been inſtituted at Greenfield, Plainfield, Norwich, Windham, and Pomfret. Manufactures of woollen, linen, buttons, paper, glaſs, iron, &c. have been eſtabliſhed in different parts of the ſtate. Oil-mills have been erected of a new and ingenious conſtruction. From September 30th, 1790, to September 30th, 1791, the amount of foreign exports from this ſtate was 710,310 dollars, beſides articles carried to different parts of the United States to a great amount. This ſtate at preſent owns and employs in the foreign and coaſting trade more than 35,000 tons of ſhipping.

CONNECTICUT, a river of United America, which riſes in the northern part of New Hampſhire, ſeparating that ſtate from the ſtate of Vermont, enters the ſtate of Maſſachuſetts at Northfield, croſſes that ſtate and enters the ſtate of Connecticut about ſeven miles north from Hartford, and, after dividing the latter ſtate nearly in the center, runs into the ſea at the end of Long Iſland Sound.

CONSTANCE, a city of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, ſituated on a lake called Boden Sea, or the Lake of Conſtance; it is very ancient, and was formerly Imperial, but placed under the ban of the empire in the year 1548, by the emperor Charles the Fifth, for deſerting the Roman Catholic religion. In the year 1549, it was placed under the power of the houſe of Auſtria, by Ferdinand I. and though the eſtates of Swabia refuſed their aſſent, the ſubjection was ratified by the diet at Augſburg. Being neglected by the Houſe of Auſtria, the town fell to decay: ſome attempts were made by the emperor Joſeph, in the year 1785, to introduce ſome manufactures from Geneva, by allowing a free exerciſe of religious worſhip, which may in time operate in its favour. It was erected into a biſhopric in the year 570, the ſee being removed hither from Windiſh, a place in Swiſſerland, about ſix miles diſtant. The biſhop, however, as a prince of the circle of Swabia, no longer reſides at Conſtance, his reſidence is at Merſberg. From the year 1414 to 1418, was held here a famous council, in which John Huſs and Jerom of Prague were both ſentenced to be burned: 30 miles ENE. Zurich. Long. 26. 48. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. 36. N.

Boujeia. Long. 6. 15. E. Greenwich. Lat. 36 50. N.

CONSTANTINOPLE, a city of Europe, and capital of the Turkiſh empire, anciently called Byzantium, but changed to Conſtantinople by the emperor Conſtantine, who made it the ſeat of the Roman empire in the Eaſt; the Turks call it Iſtamboul, or the Fertile Place. It is one of the largeſt cities in Europe, being thirty-four or thirty-five miles round, including the ſuburbs; its figure is triangular, with two ſides to the ſea. The harbour lies to the north, which is convenient and large, and of eaſy approach from the Black Sea, or from the Mediterranean. It is ſurrounded with walls of free-ſtone, here and there mixed with bricks, and flanked with 250 towers. There are twenty-two gates, ſix on the land ſide, and ſixteen towards the ſea. The ſtreets are badly paved, narrow, dark, and ſlippery, interſperſed here and there with beautiful edifices, public baths, &c. in the midſt of low houſes, built of wood or earth, which often diſappear in the night, deſtroyed by fire, or plundered by the ſoldiery. The inhabitants are ſaid to amount to 900,000, 300,000 of which are Greeks, nearly 200,000 Armenians, the reſt Turks or other Europeans. Prince Cantimer counted 40,000 houſes, without including the ſuburbs: thoſe of the rich are ſumptuouſly and elegantly decorated. They reckon ſeven royal moſques, built with magnificence and taſte, and maintained with care, ſurrounded with ſpacious courts, and adorned with beautiful fountains. Among the moſt celebrated is that of Saint Sophia, which fronts the great gate of the ſeraglio; it was built by the emperor Juſtinian, and the Turks hold it in the ſame veneration as did the Chriſtians; the Grand Signior going there in perſon every Friday. The revenue belonging to it is very great, and it will contain 100,000 perſons conveniently. Beſides a prodigious number of moſques, the Greeks have thirty churches in the city and ſuburbs, the Armenians a great many, and the Roman Catholics ſeveral, and the Swediſh nation has been permitted to build a Lutheran church. The ſeraglio, which occupies the place of ancient Byzantium, was built by Mahomet II. and is three leagues in circumference, including the gardens; it is an aſſemblage of palaces and apartments, placed by the ſide of one another, without ſymmetry, and without order. The outſide appearance has nothing great, cypreſſes and other evergreens being the chief things to be ſeen: the interior apartments are adorned with paintings of flowers, landſcapes, &c. furniſhed with baths, marble baſons, French and Venetian looking-glaſſes, Perſian tapeſtry, China vaſes, &c. The principal entrance of the palace is of marble, and is called Capi, that is The Port, which name is given ſometimes to the whole empire. Through this gate is the entrance to the firſt court, in which are the mint, the infirmary, and other buildings. The ſecond court is called the Divan-court, the great council chamber being there, with the kitchen, the treaſury, and ſtables. To the north, adjoining the Divan, is the ſeraglio, properly ſo called, through which is a narrow paſſage leading to the audience-chamber, which is of amazing magnificence, particularly the throne. Thus far ambaſſadors are permitted to come, but no farther. Betwixt the two moſques of Sultan Solyman and Bajazet is the old ſeraglio, in which are ſhut up the wives of the deceaſed Sultans. The ſlave-market is ſituated near a ſtreet which leads to Adrianople. The caſtle of Seven Towers is a ſtate priſon, and ſituated near the ſea of Marmora. Weſt of the city is the imperial palace of Aijub, or Saint Job, with a village of the ſame name, which may be reckoned one of the fauxbourgs, where, in a moſque, is the tomb of the Sultan Othman, founder of the empire. Galata is another fauxbourg, ſurrounded with walls flanked with towers; the inhabitants are chiefly Greeks, Armenians, Franks, and Jews, who chooſe it for their reſidence, for the ſake of living with greater liberty than in the city. Pera is another fauxbourg, ſituated on an eminence, from whence may be ſeen the ſeraglio, and the coaſt of Aſia; the air is more pure than in the city; here the ambaſſadors of Europe reſide; and the moſt reſpectable ſort of Greeks. Tophana, ſo called from the cannon-foundry eſtabliſhed there, is another fauxbourg. The plague generally viſits this city every year, and makes dreadful havock: fires deſtroy a great many houſes, which, perhaps, are increaſed by the hopes of plunder. Among the principal curioſities of Conſtantinople, may be reckoned the ancient Hippodrome, by the Turks called Atmeidan, in which ſtands a pyramid of Theban marble, inſcribed with hieroglyphics; the coloſſus, or pillar, conſiſting of ſeveral ſquare blocks of free-ſtone; a triangular pillar of caſt braſs, repreſenting three ſerpents folded in each other, but the triple head fallen off; a column erected in honour of the emperor Arcadius, &c. Conſtantinople was conſecrated the ſeat of the Roman empire in the year 330; and continued the reſidence of the Chriſtian emperors in the eaſtern part of the empire till the year 1453, when it was taken by the Turks, from which time it has been the capital of their dominions. Long. 46. 40. COPENHAGEN, a city, ſea-port, and capital of Denmark, ſituated on the eaſtern coaſt of the iſland of Zealand, on a bay of the Baltic, near the Sound, built on a moraſs, and ſurrounded with ſeveral ſmall lakes; yet the air is not unwholeſome. It was only a village till the year 1254, when it became a town. In 1443, it was erected into a biſhop's ſee, and made the reſidence of the king; but ſuffered to enjoy its own municipal laws. A fire, in the year 1728, in twenty-four hours, conſumed 1650 houſes, five churches, the univerſity, and four colleges. Another fire, in the month of February, 1794, deſtroyed the royal palace. Copenhagen is accounted the beſt built city of the North; the ſtreets are well paved, with a foot-way on each ſide, but too narrow for general uſe. The greateſt part of the buildings are of brick, and a few of free-ſtone, the houſes of the nobility are in general ſplendid, and built in the Italian ſtyle. The harbour is always crowded with ſhips, and the ſtreets are interſected by broad canals, which bring the merchandize cloſe to the warehouſes on the quays. Copenhagen contains about 4000 houſes, four royal palaces, nineteen churches, and a great number of public buildings, eleven public places, or markets, and 186 ſtreets, almoſt all broad, and in a ſtraight line. The palace, which was burnt down in the year 1794, was an immenſe pile of building, of hewn ſtone, the wings and ſtables of brick, ſtuccoed: this palace was called Chriſtianſburg, being built by Chriſtian VI. at his own expence, without laying any tax on his ſubjects. The hoſpital of Warlow is large and convenient, containing 330 beds, occupied by as many poor; the church is ſo placed that ſervice may be heard by thoſe who are confined to their bed. The houſe of orphans ſupports ſixty boys and 40 girls. The public library is well filled; at the top is a tower, deſigned for aſtronomical obſervations. The exchange is a large Gothic building; veſſels are brought very near it by means of canals: here the merchants aſſemble; here are bookſellers' ſhops, magazines of cloth, ſilk ſtuffs manufactured in the town, and other merchandize. This city owes its preſent beauty to the fire of 1728, having been rebuilt in a better ſtyle. The new part of the town raiſed by the late king, Frederic V. is extremely beautiful: it conſiſts of an octagon, containing four uniform and elegant buildings of hewn ſtone, and of four broad ſtreets leading to it, in oppoſite directions. In the middle of the area ſtands an equeſtrian ſtatue of Frederic V. in bronze, as large as life, which is juſtly admired. It was caſt at the expence of the Eaſt India Company, by Saly, and coſt 80,000 pounds ſterling. Long. 12. 32. E. Greenwich. Lat. 55. 41. N.

CORINTH, or Corinto, or Coranto, a town of Greece, in the Morea, ſituated near a narrow iſthmus to which it gives name, and which joins the Morea to the weſt of Greece, between the Gulf of Lepanto and that of Engia. It was formerly a powerful city, till it was totally deſtroyed and burnt by Mummius, the Roman conſul. The riches found in the city were immenſe, and the metals melted and mixed together by the fire formed what was called Corinthian braſs: this happened in the year 146 before Chriſt. Julius Cæſar endeavoured to reſtore it to its former grandeur, and ſent thither a colony: to whom St. Paul preached, and wrote his two Epiſtles. Under the Eaſtern Emperors, it was the ſee of an archbiſhop, ſubject to the patriarch of Conſtantinople. Roger, king of Naples, became poſſeſſed of it in the empire of Emanuel. It had afterwards ſovereigns of its own, who ceded it to the Venetians, from whom it was taken by Mahomet II. in the year 1458. The Venetians retook it in 1687, and held it till the year 1715, when they loſt it to the Turks, in whoſe hands it has remained ever ſince. The town at preſent contains about 13 or 1400 inhabitants; each houſe has a garden, planted with orange and other fruit trees: 46 miles E. Athens, and 342 SW. Conſtantinople. Long. 40. 40. E. It contains 269 pariſhes, 76,739 houſes, and 416,000 ſouls. The county contains more ſoil that is good than bad, and ſome parts of the county are highly cultivated, the whole is hilly, and, a few places excepted, barren of timber. The principal towns are Cork, Kingſale, Youghal, Mallow, Doneraile, and Bandon-bridge; the principal rivers are Bandon, Blackwater, and Lee. The borough towns which return members to the Iriſh parliament are Cork, Rathcormuck, Middleton, Charleville, Caſtlemartyr, Baltimore, Clonekilty, Bandon-bridge, Doneraile, Kingſale, Mallow, and Youghal, two likewiſe are returned for the county.

CORK, a city of Ireland, and capital of a county of the ſame name, the ſee of a biſhop, united with Roſs, ſuffragan of the archbiſhop of Caſhel, ſituated on an iſland in the river Lee, with two large ſtone bridges over the principal branches of the river. The town has been ſo much improved and enlarged, that it is now above thrice as large as formerly, and its commerce increaſed in proportion. Several broad ſtreets have been lately added, by filling up the canals that formerly run through them. The earl of Marlborough beſieged and took this town from king James's army in 1690, when the duke of Grafton, who ſerved as a volunteer, was killed in the attack. It contains about 8600 houſes, and upwards of 70,000 inhabitants, and has twelve companies of foot in the barracks. The annual revenue of the city amounts to 1300*l.* out of which the mayor has a ſalary of 500*l.* Its wealth ariſes from the capacious and commodious haven called the Cove, one of the beſt in the world: the entrance ſafe, in which any number of ſhips may ride ſecure from every wind. Twelve hundred veſſels have reſorted here in a year in time of peace, and it is defended by a fort in the great iſland. Ships from all nations victual here. Veſſels of 120 tons may come up to the quay, but thoſe of burden unload at Paſſage, 5½ miles from Cork. The exportation, the largeſt in the kingdom, conſiſts chiefly of beef, hides, butter, tallow, and other proviſions. Here are two good modern hoſpitals for poor boys, beſides alms-houſes, ſchools, an infirmary, exchange, and cuſtom-houſe, which, as well as the other public buildings and walks, are no great ornament to the city. The houſes are old, and far from elegant in their appearance, except on the new quays, and the city moſtly compoſed of lanes, interſecting the ſtreets at right angles. Cork is governed by a mayor, ſheriffs, and common council, and returns two members to the Iriſh parliament: 120 miles SW. Dublin. Long. 8. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 51. 54. N.

CORNWALL, the moſt weſterly county of England, is almoſt an iſland, being ſurrounded on all ſides by the ſea, except towards the eaſt, where it is bounded by the county of Devon for the length of 43 miles from north to ſouth. From this boundary to the weſtward, the land continually decreaſes in breadth, forming itſelf into a figure reſembling a cornucopia; having the Briſtol channel on the north, and the Engliſh channel on the ſouth, both ſeas meeting in a manner in a point, at the promontory called the Land's End, on the weſt. In ſome places it is almoſt 18 miles acroſs; in others, about 13; and in ſome not more than five. The whole length is about 78 miles. It contains nine hundreds, 201 pariſhes, and 758,484 acres. The land, ſtretching itſelf out in the form of a narrow peninſula, is high and mountainous in the center, and declines towards the ſea on each ſide. On the ſea-ſhores and the vallies, near the banks of the great rivers, are the chief and almoſt only ſeats of cultivation. The higher grounds exhibit, in many parts, the appearance of a dreary waſte. In the vallies, on the ſea-coaſts and great rivers, and in almoſt all the low and flat grounds in more inland ſituations, are to be found ſtrata of marl, rich loams, and clays, which, being alternately intermixed, and with poorer ſoils, afford an extenſive field to the induſtry of the inhabitants. The mines of Cornwall conſiſt chiefly of tin, copper, and ſome lead. The ſtrata in which theſe metals are found, extend from the Land's End, in a direction from weſt to eaſt, a very conſiderable diſtance into the county of Devon, to the fartheſt part of the Dartmore hills. This extenſive range forms the high ground in the middle of Cornwall, from which the wind, rain, and ſtorms, have waſhed much of the vegetable earth to enrich the vallies, and in which they have been aided by the operations of the miners. Formerly, immenſe quantities of tin were found in the county of Devon, and in the eaſtern part of Cornwall; but at preſent the chief ſeat of mining lies to the weſtward of Saint Auſtle. From hence to the Land's End, the principal mines are to be found in various ſtrata, extending along the northern coaſt, keeping a breadth of about ſeven miles. The annual produce of tin for ſeven years, from 1786 to 1792, both incluſive, has been about 22,000 blocks, amounting nearly to 10l. 10s. per block, excluſive of duties, in the whole affording a produce of 330,000 pounds. From the ſtream-ore is produced generally what is called grain tin, amounting to 5 or 600 blocks per quarter, and ſometimes more. The ſuperior price of this tin above the common tin, at different times, has been from four to twelve per hundred weight. Native gold has been found in ſome ſtream works, and alſo, but more minutely, blended in ſome mines of tin. The produce of the whole of the copper mines amounts to about 40,000 tons of ore, yielding, on an average, about eleven, three fourths, in the hundred; and conſequently producing about 4,700 tons of copper. The greateſt part of the copper ores are ſent out of the county to be ſmelted, and the price is very variable; but taking the ore at 8l. per ton, the produce of the copper mines will amount annually to about 320,000l. There are alſo ſome lead mines in different parts of the county, but they are not much worked at preſent, nor is their produce great, although the ores in general, it is ſaid, produce a pretty conſiderable proportion of ſilver. Of iron ore there is abundance in many parts of the county; but there are no mines of this ore which have been much worked. Many tons have indeed been lately ſent to Wales, which the proprietors ſay is ſo rich, that they have not been able to find out a proper flux for it. Probably, the ore they received, has not been properly analyſed. Some ſtate the number of men employed in the mines at 22,000; others, at not above 9000; but including the ſtreamers, who are a diſtinct body from the miners, the number of men, women, and children employed in raiſing the ore, waſhing, ſtamping, and carrying it, will probably amount to 16,000. In Cornwall, the air is milder in winter than in the more internal parts of England, and cooler in the ſummer months. From its being open to the vaſt Atlantic ocean, without the intervention of any land almoſt to the coaſt of America, it receives the whole force of the ſouth-weſt winds, which are remarked to blow in general throughout Great Britain four-fifths of the year. The air is thereby more full of moiſture, and frequently ſubject to fogs, but they are not unhealthy. The winters are very open, and there are but few in which gentlemen are able to procure ice to fill their ice houſes. From the prevalency of the ſouth-weſt winds alſo, it is very difficult to raiſe plantations of trees in expoſed ſituations; and it is only in ſheltered vales where any remains of the ancient natural woods are to be found, although there is no doubt that this country, as well as the greateſt part of all continents and iſlands, has originally been covered with wood. Myrtles grow every where in the open air, without the aid of green-houſes, both in this county and Devonſhire, particularly on the ſouthern coaſts. Many other tender green-houſe plants are to be ſeen in the open air, in the gardens of the curious. Fruit-trees are every where found to thrive, particularly the apple; and in the eaſtern part of the county a great deal of cider is made, and of very good quality; but very little is produced to the weſt of Truro. The mulberry-tree flouriſhes well in Cornwall, in the weſtern parts, and the fruit ripens in perfection. Cornwall returns 44 members to the Britiſh parliament, viz. two for the county, and two each for the following boroughs: Bodmyn, Boſſiney, Callington, Camelford, Fowey, Grampound, Helſton, Launceſton or Dunheved, Liſkeard or Liſkerret, Eaſt-Looe, Weſt-Looe or Portpigham, Loſtwithiel, Mitchell or Midſholl, Newport, Penryn, Saint Germain's, Saint Ive's, Saint Mawe's, Saltaſh, Tregony, and Truro.

CORSIARA, a town of Perſia, in the province of Farſiſtan : 100 miles SW. Schiras.

CORSICA, an iſland in the Mediterranean, about 90 miles in length, and from 25 to 45 in breadth, called by the ancient Greeks Kyrnos or Kirnon ; the Romans called it Corſica. In the time of Pliny, the number of towns was 34, five or ſix of which only exiſt at preſent. It is not one of the moſt agreeable countries of Europe, but not ſuch as is deſcribed by Seneca, who was baniſhed thither ; he repreſents it as ſurrounded with rocks, and affording nothing but barren deſerts, in want of water and bread-corn, and winter deſtroying the olives. This is not a juſt repreſentation : the inhabitants reap good harveſts in ſummer, and gather plenty of fruit in the autumn ; the warmth of the climate is cooled by the ſea-breezes. The air is healthy, except on the eaſt coaſt near Aleria, and ſome few other places, where the marſhes exhale malignant vapours. There are ſeveral excellent ports on the coaſts ; the interior part is very mountainous ; a long chain of mountains divides it into two unequal parts ; in which are diſperſed thick foreſts ; it is watered by a great number of rivers well ſupplied with fiſh, and the coaſts abound with tunny, ſturgeon, oyſters, &c. There are ſeveral mineral ſprings, both hot and cold. Quadrupeds are in great number ; the horſes are ſmall, but lively ; aſſes and mules are likewiſe ſmall, but of wonderful ſpirit and agility. Cows and oxen are tolerably large, but in general lean ; the cows give but little milk, for want of better paſture ; the inhabitants generally make uſe of oil inſtead of butter. Goats and ſheep are in great plenty. Among the wild animals, is the mouffoli, an animal like a ſtag in ſize and colour, but with the horns of a ram, extremely ſhy and nimble : wild boars are common, as likewiſe foxes, but not wolves. Among the birds, are eagles, vultures, turtles, wood-pigeons, thruſhes, partridges, pheaſants, &c. The ſcorpion found in the iſland is without venom ; a large ſpider, whoſe ſting is as ſharp as that of the bee, ſeems the only venomous inſect in the iſland. Near Vico is a foreſt of wood, ſaid to be capable of maintaining a numerous fleet. Oranges, lemons, figs, almonds, cheſnuts, and olives flouriſh here ; the latter is one of its principal riches. Vines grow almoſt in every part of the iſland ; the wines are ſweet and ſtrong, and generally uſed by the Germans inſtead of mountain. Other trees are the mulberry, laurel, myrtle, &c. Wheat is cultivated ; as likewiſe barley, rye, and millet. Bees produce a great deal of honey, which is liable to be bitter, and not much admired, but the wax is excellent. The mountains are rich in lead, iron, copper, and ſilver : a mine of the latter was opened in the year 1767, where a quintal of mineral produced 18 ounces of ſilver. Here and there are found mines of alum and ſaltpetre ; the granite of Corſica is nearly equal to the Oriental. Porphyry, jaſper, talk, amianthies, emeralds, and other precious ſtones, are found ſcattered in the mountains ; and the ſouth coaſt abounds with beautiful coral. Corſica was at one time ſubject to the Carthaginians, who, to render the inhabitants the more ſubmiſſive, deſtroyed their vines and olive trees—a deteſtable piece of policy, and unworthy of any nation. The Romans drove out the Carthaginians ; the Goths ſucceeded the Romans, and the Saracens the Goths. The Franks took it from the latter, and gave it to the pope. The pope ceded it to the republic of Piſa. The Genoeſe having vanquiſhed the Piſans, became maſters of this iſland. The Corſicans mortally hated the Genoeſe for their rigorous treatment, and ſeveral times attempted to throw off their yoke. In the year 1735, the malcontents concerted a plan of a new and independent form of government ; and in 1736 they proclaimed Theodore Baron Newhoff, a native of Weſtphalia, for their king. The Genoeſe called in the French to their aſſiſtance ; and Theodore, unable to reſiſt their unlimited power, left the iſland to ſolicit friends in England and elſewhere ; but he ſolicited in vain. Involved in debt, he was ſeveral years confined in England a priſoner in the King's Bench, till relieved by an act of inſolvency ; when he regiſtered his kingdom of Corſica for the uſe of his creditors, and died at Weſtminſter in 1756. In the abſence of Theodore, the malcontents were headed by Gaffori, who was aſſaſſinated in 1753. Paſcal Paoli ſucceeded him, who governed with prudence, and fought with courage, till at length he was forced to ſeek an aſylum in England ; and in the year 1769 Corſica was ceded to France. The French eſtabliſhed their government on a milder ſyſtem. At the late French revolution, in 1789, Corſica was conſtituted a department of France, at the particular requeſt of Paoli. In conſequence, however, of ſome miſunderſtanding, Paoli revolted, called in the aſſiſtance of the Engliſh, and drove the French from the iſland. Thus, in the year 1794, Corſica was annexed to the Britiſh dominions, and the ſovereignty was declared to be in his Majeſty George III. king of Great Britain, and his ſucceſſors, according to the order of ſucceſſion, and Corte is eſtabliſhed as the capital. The number of inhabitants is about 160,000. —On the 22d of October, the Engliſh evacuated this iſland, and it was again annexed to the French republic.

CORSOER, a ſea-port town of Denmark, on the weſt coaſt of the iſland of Zealand, built on a promontory, which extends into the Great Belt. COVENTRY, a city of England, in the county of Warwick: for ſeveral centuries eſteemed a rich and flouriſhing town on account of its manufactures. The number of inhabitants, taken at different periods in the laſt 200 years, is very different. Before 1549, they were found to have been 15000: but on that violent convulſion, the diſſolution, trade grew ſo low, and occaſioned ſuch a deſertion of people from the city, as to reduce them to 3000. To remedy this evil, Edward VI. granted the city a charter for an additional fair. In 1644, when the inhabitants were numbered, from the apprehenſion of a ſiege, they were found to amount to 9,500. By Bradford's Survey of Coventry, made in 1748, and 1749, there appears to have been 2065 houſes, and 12 117 people. The accounts at preſent vary from 20,000 to 30,000: but, perhaps, the middle ſum between both may come neareſt the truth. It was ſurrounded with walls in the 14th century; the expences of which were defrayed by money ariſing from taxes on wine, malt, oxen, hogs, calves, and ſheep, conſumed in Coventry. Theſe walls were in great ſtrength and grandeur, furniſhed with 32 towers, and 12 gates; and continued till the 22nd of July, 1661, when great part of the wall, moſt of the towers, and many of the gates, were pulled down, by order of Charles II. When the king ſet up his ſtandard at Nottingham, he ſent to this city to acquaint them that he meant to reſide there for ſome time, and deſired quarters for his forces in and about the place. The mayor and aldermen offered to receive the king, but refuſed admittance to any of the ſoldiery. Incenſed at this, Charles attacked the city, and with his ordinance forced open one of the gates, but was repulſed by the valour of the citizens, and obliged to retire with loſs. In the following month Coventry was regularly garriſoned by the Parliament, and remained in its poſſeſſion during the whole war. Coventry was incorporated by king Edward III. and the firſt mayor was choſen in 1348; and was erected into a county, with a conſiderable diſtrict, in the year 1451, by Henry VI.; both theſe charters were farther confirmed by James I. It ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament; the number of voters is eſtimated at about 3000. Two parliaments have been held in this city. The firſt in 1404, by Henry IV. which was ſtyled Parliamentum Indoctorum, ſo named from its inveteracy againſt the clergy. The other in 1459, by Henry VI. and was called Parliamentum Diabolicum, by reaſon of the multitude of attainders paſſed againſt Richard, duke of York, and his adherents. Here was formerly a celebrated monaſtery, founded by king Canute, for nuns, who being ſoon after turned out, Leofric, earl of Mercia, in the year 1040, enlarged, and in a manner rebuilt it. He endowed it with ſuch revenues, that Robert de Linſey, biſhop of Lichfield and Cheſter, transferred the epiſcopal ſee hither; but this ſee a few years after returned to Lichfield; yet ſo as that the ſame biſhop is ſtyled biſhop of Coventry and Lichfield. A ſtory has been handed down for ſome centuries, that Leofric, the firſt lord of this city, being angry with the citizens, oppreſſed them with heavy taxes, which he reſolved not to leſſen on any other terms than that his wife Godiva, who interceded earneſtly with him for their relief, ſhould ride naked through the moſt frequented part of the city; which, if we may credit the common report, ſhe did, covered up in her very long hair, unſeen of any, and delivered her citizens of Coventry from ſuch a number of taxes for ever. Coventry contains three pariſh churches, beſides ſeveral places of worſhip for Diſſenters, Methodiſts, and Quakers. When the cathedral was ſtanding, Coventry poſſeſſed a matchleſs group of churches, all ſtanding within one cemetery. St. Michael's, at preſent, is a ſpecimen of the moſt beautiful ſteeple in Europe. Every part of it is ſo finely proportionable, that Sir Chriſtopher Wren ſpoke of it as a maſterpiece of architecture. The principal manufactures are ribbons, gauſes, camblets, &c.; a little out of the town is the head of the great canal to Oxford; and another canal is made to join the Staffordſhire canal near Lichfield. The former paſſes by Branſton, and, of courſe, opens a communication by water between Coventry and London. The market is on Friday: 49½ miles N. Oxford, and 91 NNW. London. Long. 1. 30. W. COVORDEN, a city of the Netherlands, in Overiſſel, the capital of Drent, one of the ſtrongeſt places in the United Provinces, in the form of a regular pentagon, with ſeven large baſtions, called after the names of the provinces, ſeven half moons, and ſeven ravelins, and beſides a fortreſs ſurrounded with five other baſtions, and a double ditch, very large and deep; the ramparts high and thick, added to this, its ſituation, in the midſt of a moraſs, renders the approach extremely difficult. It has frequently been taken and retaken by the Spaniards and Dutch; the latter fortified it in 1579, on account of its important ſituation, being reckoned the key of the provinces Groningen and Frieſland; the Spaniards took it in 1581. Maurice, prince of Orange, retook it for the States in 1592; a little time after, the Spaniards attempted to blockade it, but the prince obliged them to retire, and abandon the forts which they had conſtructed in the environs. In the year 1672, Covorden was attacked by Chriſtopher Bernard de Ghaelen, biſhop of Munſter, and taken the 12th of July, being ſhamefully given up by the governor. Charles de Rabenhaut, who commanded the Dutch forces, being informed that the garriſon, confiding in the ſtrength of the place, were very remiſs in their guard, reſolved to ſurpriſe it, and profiting by the rigour of the ſeaſon, which had frozen the moraſs, ſent ſome troops under the command of colonel Eybergen, who arrived at Covorden, the 23d of December, at 3 o'clock in the morning, made themſelves maſters of the city, killed the governor, and ſent the garriſon priſoners to Groningen: 60 miles NE. COURTRAY, or Courtrai, called by the Flemings Cortryck, a town of Flanders of the fourth rank, with a chateleny, ſituated on the river Lis, and celebrated for its manufacture of table linen. Philip the Bold, duke of Burgundy, and comte of Flanders, built a caſtle in 1385, and fortified the city with many towers. In the year 1302, the famous battle of Spurs was fought near Courtray, between the French and Flemings, in which the former were defeated with the loſs of 20,000 men. In 1382, Charles VI. attacked the Flemings, who had revolted againſt their comte Lewis, and having defeated them at Roſebecque, he ſacked and burned Courtray. Courtray was often taken and retaken in the laſt century; the French became maſters in 1643, and the marchal de la Ferté Sennetere obliged the Spaniards, who had begun a ſiege, to retire. In 1645, the king of Spain took it, and added to its fortifications. In the year 1646, the duke of Orleans, uncle to Louis XIV. took it, in ſight of the army of Spain, commanded by the duke of Lorrain, who could give it no ſuccour; the following year the archduke Leopold took it from the French by aſſault. In 1667, it was again taken and fortified by the order of Louis XIV. and ceded to France by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, in 1668. In 1678, it was by the peace of Nimmegen reſtored to Spain. In 1683, the French again became maſters of the town and citadelle, which they diſmantled in 1684, and reſtored it to Spain in 1697. The French took it the 18th of June, 1792, under the command of general Luckner, but retired from it ſoon after. In the month of April, 1794, the French took it again : 22 miles SW. Ghent, and 24 S. The town is ſurrounded by walls, large, and well built: the ſtreets wide and ſtraight, but badly paved. It contains ſeveral churches and convents; on the weſt ſide is a fauxbourg, with a palace which belonged to the king, walled round: on the ſouth ſide is a royal caſtle near the bank of the Viſtula, alſo walled round, and defended with towers and baſtions. The cathedral is not large, and rather rich than handſome: here was preſerved a conſiderable treaſure in the regal jewels, the crown, the ſceptre, and the globe uſed at the coronation of the kings. Here they were crowned for near five centuries, until the laſt, who was crowned at Warſaw; here they were buried. It is dedicated to St. Staniſlaus, the biſhop of Cracow, who was killed by king Boleſlaus II. at the altar of a church, ſituated on a hill, named Skalka, near the city. The day before the coronation, it was cuſtomary for the king elect to walk to this church, as if to expiate the crime of his predeceſſor. Cracow is the ſee of a biſhop, erected in the year 1000, and ranks the firſt biſhop in that kingdom. This city was formerly near the centre of Poland, but was in the year 1792 a frontier town: it occupies a great ſpace of ground, but, with its ſuburbs united, hardly contains 16,000 inhabitants. The devaſtation was begun by Charles XII. king of Sweden, who took it at the beginning of the preſent century, but it ſuffered yet more ſeverely in the late invaſion by the Ruſſians and the Pruſſians. Koſciuſko drove out a Ruſſian garriſon, in March, 1794, but being called to the ſupport of Warſaw, Cracow was obliged to ſurrender at diſcretion to the troops of Pruſſia, on the 15th of June following: 264 miles S. Here is a manufacture of coarſe cloth, and a conſiderable coaſting trade in corn, thread, yarn, fiſh, and ſkins. The river on which it ſtands is a mile wide, and the harbour an excellent one. Long. 0. 43. W. Edinburgh. Lat. 57. 39. N.

CROMARTY, a ſmall county of Scotland, bounded on the north by a Frith or river, called the Frith of Cromarty; on the eaſt by the Frith of Murray, and every where elſe by the county of Roſs. This county is the ſmalleſt of the kingdom, being only 12 miles long, and 3 broad. Cromarty is the chief town. The Frith is the moſt commodious of Scotland, and capable of containing all the navy of England with ſafety. The country is tolerably fertile; but though once almoſt a continued foreſt, is now deſtitute of timber. Cromarty returns one member to the Britiſh parliament alternately with Nairn.
